The Time to Strike the Rebellion a Fatal Blow.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, Jan. 22.

The Washington Star, of yesterday, in received. It has the following highly important intelligence in regard to the movements of the army under the command of Maj.-Gen. BURNSIDE:

"The understanding in Washington, to-day, is that a portion of the Army of the Potomac, Gen. Hooker's Division, has, at last, certainly crossed the Rappahannock, and that the movement took place yesterday."

GEN. BURNSIDE'S ADDRESS TO THE ARMY.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, CAMP, NEAR FALMOUTH, VA., Jan. 20, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS No. 7.—The Commanding General announces to the Army of the Potomac that they are about to meet the enemy once more. The late brilliant actions in North Carolina, Tennessee and Arkansas divided and weakened the enemy on the Rappahannock, and the auspicious moment seems to have arrived to strike a great and mortal blow at the rebellion and to gain that decisive victory which is due to the country. Let the gallant soldiers of so many brilliant battlefields accomplish this achievement, and a fame the most glorious awaits them.

The Commanding General calls for a firm and united action of officers and men, and, under the providence of God, the Army of the Potomac will have taken the great step toward restoring peace to the country, and the Government to its rightful authority. By command of Major-Gen. BURNSIDE.

REPORTS FROM HEADQUARTERS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Thursday, Jan. 22.

The storm pending for the past three days has moderated, leaving the roads in the worst possible condition.

There is, at present, no indication of a change of wind.

OUR SPECIAL ARMY CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PLAN OF OPERATIONS.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Tuesday Evening, Jan. 20, 1863.

The right and left wings of the army are in motion. We shall endeavor to cross the river about ten miles above Falmouth. All operations below are mere feints to deceive the enemy. One corps of infantry are to proceed down the river, and feign crossing at several points. LEE'S plantation, which I described in a letter this morning, is one of them. A real crossing will be made below should a certain emergency arise.

Major SPAULDING and Major MAGRUDER are to construct the pontoons above. The Fifteenth New-York Engineers and Regulars are also to throw several bridges. One train of pontoons is to be held in reserve directly opposite Fredericksburgh.

Saturday evening a company of the Fifteenth New-York Engineers were busily employed in throwing up artilery intrenchments about ten miles below here.

The great victory of the West has had an exhilerating effect upon the army. The soldiers are hopeful. J.

A Distinguished Russian Officer—The Enemy's Pickets Doubled in Front—His Force Probably Diminished—Gen. Burnside's Intentions—Court-Martial Sentences, &c.

Capt. RAE DE BRECHER, of the Flying Artillery, Russian service, has entered here with a letter of introduction from Gen. McCLELLAN to Gen. BURNSIDE, requesting that every courtesy be tendered him in return for the attentions which have uniformly been extended to our own officers while in Russia. The Captain, who comes on a tour of observation, has held interviews with Gens. BURNSIDE, PARK, HOOD and other officers, and several times ridden out among the camps, and up and down this river's bank.

Within the last twenty-four hours the enemy have doubled their pickets immediately opposite here, as if anticipating an attack from us, or to cover the withdrawal of troops southward. The conviction is becoming more and more settled in the minds of our Generals that the force of rebels on the other side of the Rappahannock has been materially diminished. Past experience has taught us that the Confederate Generals are none too shrewd to attempt keeping our large army here by a show of pickets and numerous camp fires, while the bulk of the army is sent to operate at other points. Gen. BURNSIDE, however, is not one easily to be deceived. If uncertain as to the position of the rebels, he will again push over and clear up the mystery.

Capt. HUNT, of the late Gen. BAYARD's Staff, who has returned from below, reports that the enemy's camps have disappeared, while Capt. WEST, who has been up the river for several miles, says "the enemy there are as thick as blackberries in June."

A batch of Court-martial cases have just been disposed of in Gen. HOOD's Division. The following are some of the sentences pronounced by the Court:

Private ——, for "misbehavior before the enemy, to forfeit all pay now due him, except just dues to sutlers and laundresses, and all pay that may become due him during the remainder of the term of his enlistment, and be confined at hard labor on public works during the remainder of his term of enlistment."

Private ——, "offering violence to his superior officer," sentence same as above.

Corporal ——, "for absenting himself from his company and regiment before the enemy at Fredericksburgh, to be reduced to the grade of a private soldier; that he forfeit all pay now due him, and all that may become due him during the term of enlistment, and serve out the balance of his term of enlistment at hard labor, &c."

Private ——, "For leaving his regiment during the battle of Fredericksburgh, and skulking in the woods. That the word coward be printed on a board, that board be lashed to his back; that he then be marched in front of his regiment from right to left and from left to right back again; that he serve out the remainder of his term of enlistment at hard labor upon such public works as the proper authority may designate; a ball, twenty-five pounds in weight, attached to a chain six feet in length, to be fastened to his right leg every second month of his imprisonment."

To some these punishments may appear rather severe, but are no more so than the exigencies of the service demands. J.

SEDDON'S FARM, VA., Tuesday, Jan. 20, 1863.

The plantation from which I date this letter is situated on the Rappahannock, seven miles below Fredericksburgh, embracing some eleven hundred acres, and belonging to Maj. (rebel) SEDDON, brother to Gen. JOSEPH A. SEDDON, rebel Secretary of War. Within a week it has assumed importance, on account of operations performed by the enemy on the opposite side of the river. Maj. SEDDON enlisted 280 stalwart Irishmen at the outset of the rebellion, and entered the Confederate service as a Captain. He was, however, immediately promoted to a Majorship, but resigned his commission after the battle of Antietam, and returned to his residence here, where he remained until the battle of Fredericksburgh. While the engagement was progressing he availed himself of the opportunity to slip through our lines, with a considerable amount of personal effects, and cross the river at Port Royal, some 13 miles below here. He is now employed in the rebel War Department. His lady, an interesting woman of about twenty-four years of age, remains behind to take charge of the premises. A younger sister keeps her company.

The river here is eight feet deep, and prior to the war, schooners sailed up from the mouth of the Rappahannock, and received wheat, corn, potatoes and other farm products on board, from numerous private wharves built along the river. There are two constructed on this plantation.

The last vessel which ascended was from New-York, and took on board a cargo of wheat from one of these two wharves.

Our mounted pickets are scattered along this bank of the river, while rebel infantry patrol the opposite. It is very narrow, and the men converse back and forth freely.

In accordance with the mutual arrangement effected some time since, there is no picket firing. As the Adjutant of the First New-Jersey Cavalry, however, (new on duty,) drew near to the river on Sunday, one of the rebs leveled his piece at him, but desisted from firing when the Adjutant raised his cap. The First New-Jersey Cavalry are relieved every two days by detachments from the First Maine. Company H of the Sixth Pennsylvania Cavalry (RUSH Lancers) are detailed as guards at the various residences from Dr. POLLOCK's, near Falmouth, down as far as Dr. WALLACE's, a distance of nine miles. Stonewall JACKSON's headquarters are situated three miles below here, and one mile in the rear of Mrs. DAVIS's residence, located on the river. That distinguished rebel, I am informed by the Confederate pickets, rides almost daily up and down the bank of the river, viewing the situation of affairs. "Old Jack" is the term which he goes by among his men. There is scarcely a day passes during which they do not send over a verbal or written inquiry as to when we are coming over to pay them another visit, or language to that effect.

Impressed with the belief that we meditated crossing the river here, the rebels suddenly made their appearance on the opposite bank a week ago last evening, and all night long were employed in throwing up earth banks and digging rifle-pits. The weather was intensely cold for this climate—so much so that the earth would freeze as fast as the layer above it was removed, occasioning any amount of swearing along the whole line of diggers, to the great amusement of our men on this side. Wednesday morning several earthworks were visible close on the river's edge. The picks were again hard at work on Wednesday night, and Thursday morning additional works appeared. And so on every evening since, until full fifty mound rifle-pits, embrasures and breastworks are now to be seen. A battery of six brass pieces is clearly visible glistening in the sunlight, about three-quarters of a mile back from the river, while numerous camps are seen with a glass still further in the rear. One of Gen. FRANKLIN's Staff was here yesterday, and spent considerable time inspecting them. A new line of rebel pickets has within a few hours been stationed about a quarter of a mile in the rear of the first. Last evening, while riding along by the river, an Alabama Regiment marched down on the opposite side, remaining for an hour or more. A General, accompanied by his full Staff, was also to be seen a few yards above. Dense camp-fires are burning all along the ridge on the opposite shore.

The formation of the ground is very like that in the rear of Fredericksburgh—level for a few rods, then gradually ascending into a ridge, which appears to extend along the right bank for thirty miles or more. This is two miles lower down than the rebels were before the late battle. During the past four days they have been thinning out the forest very rapidly. J.

NEWS FROM REBEL SOURCES.

Gen. Burnside's Army Surrounding Fredericksburgh.

His Intentions Partly Anticipated by the Rebels.

RICHMOND, Tuesday, Jan. 20.

It is reported and confirmed by the passengers who arrived last night that Gen. BURNSIDE's forces have crossed over the river, and are now above and below Fredericksburgh.

From the Daily Examiner, Jan. 20.

The report was brought to this city last evening by the Fredericksburgh train, but was doubtfully received, that the enemy were crossing the Rappahannock at two points, on our right and left flank. It had been rumored during the morning that the battle had really been begun, but this was not confirmed by later reports.

FREDERICKSBURGH, Sunday, Jan. 18.

The demonstration of the enemy on their right and left wings, as well as in their centre, indicate that an early attempt will be made to cross the river simultaneously above and below the town. An attack may be expected at any time.

Correspondence of the Richmond Whig.

FREDERICKSBURGH, Sunday, Jan. 18, 1863.

For more than a week past a panic has prevailed among the limited population of this city, who returned after the last memorable battle, reluctant to abandon the firesides and familiar places, around which cluster so many hallowed associations and pleasant recollections. Each succeeding day has been marked by applications to the commanding officer for transportation for their furniture and other effects to places of security, which have been granted with all the promptness compatible with the exigencies of the service. This panic, at first thought to be without foundation, is warranted by recent demonstrations on the centre, as well as the right and left wing, of the enemy fronting us on the opposite side of the Rappahannock. A report reached here yesterday from below, that the indications in that quarter are such as if they intended to make an attempt to cross at once; while they are said to be no less decided above. Their centre has been more quiet. Yesterday, they were digging pits for mortar batteries just above the little village of Falmouth; and reports which reached here from the other side, several days ago, were to the effect that more heavy siege guns were being brought up, to be planted, in readiness for the anticipated renewal of the attack. From observations made with a glass at an elevated point which commands a view of the Stafford Heights, there are apparently no guns in the batteries in front, though they may be skillfully concealed from view. At times, the numbers of the enemy seem to be greatly reduced, and, again, as thick as ever. The reserve may be, and no doubt is, beyond the heights, and cannot be seen from any point on this side.

The few unlucky inhabitants who have so far been unable to get away, retire at night in expectation of being aroused at the earliest dawn by the thunder of artillery and explosions of shell. Some, however, seem determined to remain and await the issue. Indeed, the indications induce the impression that the bloody drama of the 13th December is to be reenacted at an early day, and we would not be surprised at any time at the commencement of an attack. I might say something more of matters on this side, but, for obvious considerations, forbear.

Should the foregoing opinions be correct, it will probably be seen that the enemy will attempt to cross the river simultaneously above and below; while the batteries opposite will play on the town, as it is not probable they would repeat the temerity of attempting to cross here a second time. BURNSIDE is anxious to retrieve his disaster, and late dispatches and letters from the Yankee "Army of the Rappahannock," foreshadow still another "on to Richmond" movement. Come when it may, we are on the qui vive, and will keep you duly advised. The result will, no doubt, render Fredericksburgh famous as the second "Gibraltar of the Continent."

Night before last, three Dutchmen, privates in one of our regiments, deserted, and are supposed to have gone over to the enemy. A few days since, an Irishman deserted the Yankees, and made his way to this side. He was sent to headquarters.

Yesterday Gen. SUMNER forbade the exchange of papers by officers in charge of his flag of truce, but to-day was so amiable as to remove the embargo. This is the second prohibition within two or three days; hence the late irregularity in reception of Northern dates at this point. The representatives of the Press here are much indebted for courtesies from Gens. SUMNER and RANSOM, and Cols. WOODSON and HUMPHREYS. Punctilious in enforcing the rules governing the reception of flags of truce, they have extended all proper facilities for obtaining latest public intelligence from the North.

Correspondence of the Richmond Enquirer.

FREDERICKSBURGH, Va., Sunday, Jan. 18, 1863.

All seems to be quiet to-night on the banks of the Rappannock, the pickets on either bank are so unwarlike and yet so near to each other that one cannot help feeling that this truce is but the precursor of that peace which shall restore prosperity to both sections, whilst it gives security and honorable terms of adjustment to each. The ballot box, and not the cartridge box, must and will be the arbiter of this strife—and my prediction is that the end is not afar.

Illinois and New-Jersey, the pioneer of the West and the classic ground of the Atlantic States, are instituting movements which, sooner or later, must ripen into results that will justify both peoples. In the language of our noble President, "we would hail an honorable peace with joy." And I have the best of reasons for saying that the desire of our people is none the less ardent and intense than that which animates the Northern army of the Potomac, now confronting us on the northern bank of this river. Indeed, the feeling is not confined to the Northern army, but it is prevalent among the Northern people, and no tyrant's threat or cajolery can turn them from it. Taxation, excessive debt, waste of life and blood, and usurpation, are slowly but surely doing their work, and the decline of the war spirit is indicated by that unfailing barometer, gold, which now brings 62 per cent. in the New-York market. But, whilst I give utterance to this, I am by no means persuaded that we shall not have more fighting, even on this line. My impression is that the force of a Government holding sway at Washington may again essay its desperate fortunes in a fight on this, to its armies, ill-fated ground. But if they do, we have the Generals and the army capable of beating them back as often as they are possessed by the devil of the "forward movement" madness.

The Yankees are certainly a "peculiar" people. For some three days last week not a drum could be heard, and scarcely a soldier was visible. Finding out, however, that they couldn't humbug Gen. LEE by this sort of clap-trap, last night, imitating the Chinese, they banged and noised as if they were going to tear up things generally; and, from 12 to 1 o'clock, their balloons, (three in number,) like MAHOMMEDAN's coffin, were suspended between heaven and earth, evidently looking after "rebel camp-fires." From the temperature of the atmosphere on terra firma, I rather think they were in pursuit of knowledge under difficulties.

Yesterday, under flag of truce, a sealed communication passed over from Gen. HALLECK to Gen. LEE.

I hear that the Yankees are sorely pressed for forage and wood; horses are daily dying for the want of the one, and the scarcity of the other compels the men to dig up the stumps of trees.

As establishing the truth of this, the pickets on the opposite shore for the last night or so have been unprovided with fires, notwithstanding the severity of the weather.

Some dozen or more citizens who went over during the fighting have been permitted to return home, both sides consenting. They represent that they were kindly treated, being provided by the Yankees with an abundance of good food whilst over the river. One of the returned damsels became enamored with a Yankee lieutenant, and sent him, or rather attempted to send him, some confidential essays; but though not constrained of course, the talk of the rain pouters did not altogether coincide with the views of the planet officer on our side, and the verses were consigned to the tomb of the Capulets.

A couple of deserters came over during the past week, but they knew nothing of interest to communicate.

It is reported to-night that the Yankees are constructing a wagon-road through the farm of Mr. JOHN SUMNER, in Stafford, some eight miles below, on the river, with the view of again crossing. I also hear that BURNSIDE has made a tour of inspection up the Rappahannock, from Falmouth to Ellis Ford, with the view of flanking us; but all this is talk, and you can decide upon its value accordingly; but whilst the Generals may, or may not design crossing and giving battle, the following note, sent across by a Yankee picket to a squad of our men on similar duty, will show that, so far as these "gents" are concerned, "amicable relations" exist:

JAN. 17, 1863.

Gents on Confederate States duty:

We had the pleasure to receive your letter, and very glad to find you in good spirits. We are sorry not to have any newspapers on hand, but will get some as soon as possible. We send you coffee whenever the wind permits us to do so. Can't one of you come over this evening, in that little boat you have there? We will not know you. In the hope that JEFF. DAVIS and AB LINCOLN will soon give us peace, we send our best respects.

IMPORTANT FROM ALBANY

Another Change in the Speakership Imbroglio.

WITHDRAWAL OF JUDGE DEAN.

Mr. Trimmer, of Monroe County, Put Forward as the Democratic Candidate.

ADJOURNMENT WITHOUT A BALLOT.

Message from Gov. Seymour to the Senate.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Thursday, Jan. 22, 1863.

In his reply to the resolutions of the Senate asking protection for the Assembly from the mob, pending the disorganized condition of that body, Gov. SEYMOUR plainly informs that body in substance, but politely, that it is none of its business; that the request must come from members of the body directly interested; that he took timely precautions, and did all that was deemed necessary in the premises, by consulting with the local authorities.

An hour before 12 o'clock—the hour of meeting—the lobbies and galleries of the Assembly were densely packed with the representative masses, who amused themselves after a fashion that reminded me of other days at the old Bowery theatre on sensation nights.

In the House, when the members began to gather, it soon became known that the Democrats dropped DEAN and concentrated on TRIMMER, Democrat from Rochester. This, it was understood, came about in consequence of two Democratic members having signified in writing their intention not to be parties longer to the present state of things. As an offset, the Democrats claimed that ultimately, if not at once, a sufficient number of Union members would support TRIMMER to carry him into the Speaker's chair. Of this, however, there was no proof. Under this state of things the House was called to order, prayer said, and the way cleared for business.

Then Mr. FIELDS rose to a question of privilege, and charged that last evening the House was packed by a mob, "led on by a distinguished lawyer, and a prominent Republican candidate for United States Senator." This unjust aspersion is understood to have been aimed at Hon. D. D. FIELD. The Democratic leader of the House proceeded to claim that it was his party that were for law and order, and that the other side were for disorder and violence.

Mr. S. SMITH said Mr. FIELD was on the floor as a State officer—Commissioner of the Code.

The Clerk explained that the closing of the gallery doors last evening was the result of the fact that the passageways to them were so obstructed that the Doorkeeper, aided by the Chief of Police, could not approach to unlock them.

According to the programme, Mr. DEAN now withdrew his name, and nominated Mr. TRIMMER for Speaker. He declared that it had for some time been his wish to do so.

Mr. MORGAN, Republican, of Onondaga, said this movement called for deliberation, and moved to adjourn. And so the House adjourned till to-morrow, 11 o'clock.

The disappointed crowd withdrew without understanding what this meant, some shouting "Calico!" "Calico!"

The Democrats congratulate themselves on having made a dark movement, which they profess to feel confident will succeed, and interpret the motion of Mr. MORGAN for an adjournment as at least putting Mr. CALLICOON out of the field. By some, the election of Mr. TRIMMER is predicted with considerable confidence.

I am called upon to do justice to Mr. DEAN by correcting the statement I made of his views concerning the construction of the statute relating to United States Senator. He does not hold that should the Legislature fail to go into joint ballot on the 3d proximo, it cannot be done on any subsequent day. As a constitutional lawyer, he knows the absurdity of such a construction, and therein differs radically from the Atlas and Argus, and those leaders who have made this ridiculous construction of the statute the rule of their action.

It is useless to disguise the grave apprehensions in the minds of thoughtful men, instilled by the revolutionary state of things in and about the Capitol. The introduction of a riotous mob to the galleries and lobbies, compelling the attention and awakening the fears, not only of the Senate, but the public authorities, are indications too alarming to be treated lightly. Those leaders on the Democratic side who counseled violence, and took the extreme position, not only toward Mr. CALLICOON, but on the question of United States Senator, begin to feel that they have gone too far, while the great body of their associates, cooler and more thoughtful, draw back, and absolutely refuse to be rushed to unknown depths.

The Union members will now caucus. The importance of their action cannot be disguised, any more than can be the doubts which the change of front by the Democrats has thrown over the whole question of Speaker. From the caucus of Union members this morning, when it was unanimously agreed to adhere to CALLICOON, it is understood there were four absentees, but I do not understand that the fact affords conclusive grounds for the apparent confidence of the Democrats in the election of TRIMMER, at least in the defeat of CALLICOON.

I do not understand that the attempt at an interview between Mr. CALLICOON and the Kings County Democrats has been renewed, though Mr. CALLICOON is entirely willing. What is said or done he insists shall not be in secret, but in public, and above-board.

RODERICK.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

ALBANY, Friday, Jan. 23—1 A. M.

The Union caucus, which has been in session since 7 o'clock, has just adjourned, after resolving to adhere to CALLICOON. It is understood that there were five absentees, which circumstance affords the Democrats some apparent ground of advantage for TRIMMER, for whom one Union member is claimed. Even should this be so, he would lack one vote.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.

ALBANY, Thursday, Jan. 22.

A message was received from Gov. SEYMOUR in answer to a resolution from the Senate about the Assembly difficulties, as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE: I have received from your honorable body the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, It has come to the knowledge of Senators that the election of Speaker in the Assembly is delayed by the interference and threats of a mob, admitted within the lobbies of the Assembly chamber, and which has since endeavored to control the legislative action of the Assembly by threats and by violence; therefore,

Resolved, That a Committee of three be appointed by the President of the Senate, whose duty it shall be to confer with His Excellency the Governor, and request him to take prompt and energetic action for the protection of the Assembly from mob violence, and for the speedy and condign punishment of the authors and abettors thereof.

These were communicated to me by a Committee of the Senate.

To avoid the mistaken and injurious impressions they are calculated to make, it is proper I should state that when a complaint was made on Friday last, by a member of the Assembly, that the proceedings of that body were disturbed by the disorderly conduct of persons in the lobbies and galleries, I informed him that any protection which might be called for by any member of the Assembly would be immediately afforded.

The difficulties of the Assembly grow out of the differences of opinion among its members, with respect to its organization.

There is an obvious impropriety in any interference by one department of the Government with the proceedings of any coördinate branch of that Government, unless a request is made by the parties interested.

Before the passage of the resolutions of the Senate every member of the Assembly who spoke to me upon the subject, was told that he had a right to full protection, but to avoid even apparent interference with the organization of the Assembly, which, by the Constitution, is expressly left to the exclusive control of that body, my action must be based upon a request for protection from those directly concerned.

Immediately upon being advised of the alleged disorders, I consulted with the Mayor of this city, who made adequate arrangements to prevent any outside interference.

I felt it due to the Senate, as a matter of courtesy, to explain to them that I can only act upon a request coming from members of that branch of the Legislature which is affected by any disorderly proceedings.

HORATIO SEYMOUR.

The message was read, when, without debate, it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WOODRUFF introduced a bill to incorporate the Harlem Savings Bank.

Mr. BELL offered a joint resolution to pay the New-York soldiers who, for over one month, have been without pay, out of any funds in the State Treasury, leaving the State to receive back the money advanced from the General Government. Laid over.

Adjourned.

ASSEMBLY.

ALBANY, Thursday, Jan. 22.

The Assembly met at 12 o'clock, noon.

Mr. THOMAS C. FIELDS, of New-York, rose to a question of privilege. He saw on the floor a number of persons who were not entitled to the privilege. He desired, on the part of the Democratic members of this House, to say that they would refuse to enter upon the discharge of any business unless the rules were strictly enforced. He had witnessed last night a scene which he hoped never to see renewed. A large body of Republican politicians, headed by a prominent Republican lawyer of New-York, himself a prominent candidate for the United States Senate, had rushed on the floor, taking possession of the Assembly Chamber and dictating as to what should be the action of its members. He had witnessed also, he regretted to say, a number of the former occupants of the Clerk's desk, for the past two or three days, prompting the Clerk and endeavoring to find rules and precedents for attempts to organize this House in their own manner by violating the rights of members on this floor. He (FIELDS) declared that the Democratic Party was the party of law and order, and their opponents were the advocates of lawlessness and disorder. He appealed to the spectators, to those in the lobbies and the galleries, to all the friends of the Democratic Party, to keep perfect order, and thus defeat the aim of the Republicans to create disorder here. He warned all true Democrats that it was the desire of the Republicans to force them into apparent disorder, and then to charge disorder upon them. This was the trap prepared by the Republican politicians for running this machine.

Mr. SANFORD SMITH said it was proper for him to say that DAVID DUDLEY FIELD had come upon the floor of the House by his (SMITH's) express invitation, and moreover that as a State officer he was entitled to the privileges of the floor.

The floor having been cleared,

Judge DEAN, of New-York, rose, and in a calm, dignified and able speech, addressed the Assembly. He begged leave to withdraw his name from before the House, and to nominate Hon. E. TRIMMER, of Monroe County, as the Democratic candidate for Speaker. He urged his party friends to support Mr. TRIMMER as faithfully as they had supported himself. He expressed the hope that Mr. TRIMMER would be acceptable to some of those who had been elected as Union Democrats, and urged order and deliberation on all members. He declared that he would do his utmost to secure an organization of the House on a fair basis, but not as the result of a corrupt bargain or at the price of political prodigacy.

In the course of his remarks, Judge DEAN made an eloquent and earnest appeal to members to dismiss all party feelings from their breasts—to unite for the good of the State and the whole country. He expressed a heartfelt hope that before the close of this session of the Assembly the Union would be restored, not only in the integrity of its entire territory, but also in the integrity of the Constitution, recognizing the rights of persons and the sovereignty of the States.

I trust now the time has come when the rights of every man shall be recognized on this floor, and I trust before the close of this session that we may see the Union restored, not only preserving the integrity of all its territory, but also the integrity of the Constitution, its guarantees to every citizen of personal liberty, and the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. MORGAN, (Rep.,) immediately upon the conclusion of Judge DEAN's speech, moved that the House adjourn until to-morrow. The motion was carried, and the House adjourned.

The Scotia, from New-York on the 31st ult., arrived at Queenstown at 9 o'clock on Saturday, the 10th inst., and was passed by the Arabia off Tuskar, at 2 A. M. on Sunday, the 11th inst.

A case which was recently decided in the Liverpool Court of Passage, is of considerable interest to shipowners and seamen. A sailor, who had shipped on board the ship Admiral, at Liverpool, for a voyage of twelve months, the final port of discharge being in the United Kingdom, found that the Admiral was being directed toward Savannah, though in the contract which he had signed it was distinctly stated that the vessel was only to visit "safe" and not blockaded ports. The ship, however, when in the neighborhood of Savannah, was captured by a Federal cruiser, and EDWARD MCDONALD, the plaintiff, amongst others, was captured and conveyed to New-York. For the owners, it was contended that they had no previous knowledge of Savannah being in a state of blockade, and that they had willfully violated no contract. Ultimately, after a good deal of argument and evidence on both sides, it was decided that the owners should pay MCDONALD the sum of £10, being compensation for loss of time between his release by the Federal authorities at New-York and his arrival at Liverpool.

Mr. A. TROLLOPE, the novelist, has recently been lecturing in Hertfordshire on the American war. He expressed strong sympathies with the North. The slaveholders' ideas of government were Utopian, but the Republicans were in favor of an united and permanent commonwealth. The Democrats drew their inspiration from France, and the Republicans from England, and there was nothing in history so remarkable as the cleverness with which they had copied our forms of government. In England, we had condemned the North for not allowing 8,000,000 persons to secede; but should we allow Ireland, with her 8,000,000 to separate from England? The success of the North was problematical; but it was not open to the Washington Government to permit the South to secede; if they had allowed it, we who had condemned for not allowing it, should have taunted them with doing so.

The Emperor's Remarks on New-Year's Day—What was Said, and what it Meant—No Present Plan of Mediation—A Correspondence about the Alabama, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Jan. 9, 1863.

Certain journals continue to distort, with a false air of authority, the nature of the conversation which took place between the Emperor and the American Minister on New-Year's day. Thus they say that the Emperor menaced Mr. DAYTON with intervention if more positive results were not soon attained; that he declared he could see no solution to the struggle, and that he even fixed a time at which his patience would be exhausted. All this, of course, is mere guessing, and has no foundation whatever in truth. The fact is that the Emperor confined himself to questions, and to a little inoffensive raillery on the late check at Fredericksburgh, which, taken as a whole, meant so little, that I understand the American Minister attaches no importance to it.

It was not strange that the Diplomatic Corps and the public should have been eager to hear what passed between the Emperor and Mr. DAYTON, for the American question now dominates all others in importance, and unfortunately just now the question seems to most people as far from a solution as ever. It was known that the Emperor talked a longer time to Mr. DAYTON than to any other member of the Diplomatic Corps, and without knowing what transpired, but measuring the Emperor's impatience by their own, it is not astonishing, perhaps, that the public should have arrived at such a variety of interpretations on the nature of the interview.

A late number of the Constitutionnel, the organ of the Minister of the Interior, and a paper so devoted to the rebellion as never, by any accident, to say a word on the side of truth, astonished the reading public by the following declaration, made to counteract reports that Mr. SLIDELL had lately again seen the Emperor, and that a renewal of the offer of mediation was again about to be made.

"Several foreign journals," says the Constitutionnel, "have taken the occasion of the late events in America [the battle of Fredericksburgh] to recount facts, and to lend intentions to the French Government, which are in disaccord with the attitude this Government has preserved thus far toward the United States. Some of these journals speak of new and more pressing recommendations made to the Cabinets of St. Petersburgh and London to induce them to join with the Cabinet of the Tuileries, in order to propose collectively a mediation to the contending parties. According to others, France is determined to make alone this offer at Washington and at Richmond. Again, it is a confidential agent the Emperor has charged with a mission to the North and the South; and again, a confidential agent of President DAVIS whom His Majesty has received, in order to discuss plans for future treat-ice. We are able to declare that all these reports are without foundation. France has not departed from the line of conduct she has thus far followed toward the United States. Still animated with the same sentiments of friendship and of profound sympathy for the Americans, to whatever party they may belong, she is anxious to see arrive the moment when the fatal dissensions which now divide the country shall have an end. But it is false that there is now a design of taking any new steps."

This paragraph is clearly ministerial, and was never published voluntarily by the Constitutionnel. What, therefore, does it mean? For although it no doubt tells the truth, that is no reason for the Slavery shriek to publish it; on the contrary, most Americans and Frenchmen are so thoroughly imbued with the idea that the French Government is hostile to the Union, that they regard it as a cover to some secret measures inimical to American interests. But the better explanation I think is this: The Government is going to be attacked with great vigor, and most justly, in the Chambers, on the Mexican question, and the attacking members will not fail to declare that not only has the Government engaged in a ruinous and useless war in Mexico, but that it has pursued such a line of conduct toward the American States as to alienate the sympathies of those States and to invite a war with them. The note of the Constitutionnel is therefore a preparation for the discussion in the Chambers; it is to clear off the ground for this dangerous debate, and to furnish arms to the defender of the Government, M. BILLAULT, to combat the opposition. The late official declaration of the French Government to that of the United States—a declaration which will be published here in a few days—to the effect that the French Government had no intention of departing from her position of non-intervention, and would not for the present renew the offer of an armistice, was also written principally with the view of enabling M. BILLAULT to hold it up in the Chambers as a contradiction to any charges of desiring to embroil France in a war with her ancient ally and best friend. These facts, I think, will be made apparent during the discussion on the Address.

It is told me on tolerably good authority that a correspondence has taken place between the French and English Governments on the subject of the Alabama, but for what object you would hardly conjecture. It is said that the English Cabinet fully recognize that the case of this vessel is a clear violation of the law of neutrality; but, determined not to lose their places on the American question, they intend to avoid the responsibility by provoking a vote of Parliament on the question of a recognition of the South—which vote, if given in the affirmative, as it probably would be, if provoked by the Ministry, would cover up the question of neutrality involved in the case of the Alabama, and save the Cabinet from the necessity of assuming the responsibility of the acts of Capt. SEMMES. The correspondence with France was to obtain her coöperation in a recognition of the South, so that if the United States ever threatened to go to war with England for the non-payment of the damages committed upon American commerce by Capt. SEMMES, we would have to fight both France and England.

The battle of Fredericksburgh has been thoroughly described and discussed by the French Press. The Moniteur has done for this battle what it never did for French or any other battle; it has published a large plan of the battle-field. This plan, with the accompanying description, moreover, was placed on the first page of the paper, and looked odd enough in the place where we were in the habit of looking for the official acts of the French Government. The description, which was at once dramatic and picturesque, was exceedingly well written, and, in the main, no doubt correct. Only the secession papers took occasion to boast of the fact as showing how much importance the Government attached to the Federal defeat at Fredericksburgh.

The letter of Gen. BURNSIDE, explaining the causes of the attack and repulse at Fredericksburgh, and assuming for himself all the responsibility, has produced great admiration for that officer in France, and is generally conceded to be the happiest solution of the difficulty which could have been found.

The Emperor has just sent to Mexico one of his ordnance officers, the Marquis DE GALLIFET, as an agent to collect testimony for his private use. The Emperor seems at last to have got it through his head that he has been grossly deceived in the Mexican Expedition, as the cost in life and money is fast demonstrating, and it would not be curious to see the original programme modified even at this late day. The Government continues, however, to send out reinforcements, and no one seems to see the end.

THE AMERICAN ISSUE IN ENGLAND.

A Perpetual Crisis—The Proclamation—Pro-Slavery Reaction in England—Apprehensions of Military Disasters—What Will Gov. Seymour Do?—Europe Disappointed—A Sublime Power—Southern Generals and Soldiers—Important Revelation—Another Rumor of Mediation—The Cotton Interest Flourishing—French Distress—Sale of the Sumter.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Jan. 10, 1863.

The American war is a perpetual crisis.

The anxiety has never been greater here, than at this moment. We are, as usual, waiting for news, and this news, as usual also, is expected to be of the most important character.

Has President LINCOLN issued his Emancipation Proclamation? This is the first question, and both the Abolition and Conservative parties here await the answer with anxiety. The latest papers authorized us to believe that it would be issued in any event, and that it might be extended to the emancipation of all slaves in loyal as well as rebel States. There seems to be no longer any question of constitutional authority. The President, it is presumed, may still do, as he has done, any act necessary to the salvation of the Republic. In time of peace the State Legislatures might have something to say on the subject, but State Governments seem now of very little account.

If the Abolitionists in England are full of hope, and expect the Proclamation to do what a million of men in arms have hitherto failed of doing, the conservative, Southern and Pro-Slavery journals are more bitter than ever. The Times, in the warmth of its advocacy of the South, presumes so far upon the Pro-Slavery reaction in England as to defend Slavery upon economical, humanitarian and scriptural grounds, waking up, as you may suppose, a hornet's nest of abolition papers. The fact, however, that the Times should dare to take such ground, is proof of a great change in British opinion.

Next to the anxiety respecting the Proclamation, is the desire to hear news of the military movements. The Army of the Potomac is not considered safe at Falmouth. The withdrawal of the Confederates from Winchester is believed to portend some important movement. It is hoped and feared that the Union armies of the Southwest may be defeated and compelled to surrender. We await anxiously also for the result of the expected attacks on Mobile, Charleston and Vicksburgh.

And there is another event, considered by many as of equal importance to the military movements. It is the position that may be taken by Gov. SEYMOUR, of New-York. He is looked upon as the great Democratic leader of the North. It is in his power to end the war or to cause it to be prosecuted with greater vigor. As both designs have been attributed to him and his party, we wish to know which course he has taken, or proposes to take, in guiding the destinies of the Empire State.

England and Europe have been disappointed in the effect of the battle of Fredericksburgh. A change in the Cabinet, or in the military commanders, was looked upon as a matter of course. They have no idea of the coolness and patience of the American character. The smoke of battle clears off, the wounded are provided for, and the dead buried. A Senatorial Committee inquires into the causes of the repulse, and all is serene as usual. There is a loss of ten or fifteen thousand men—we know not how many—but, with an army of 1,000,000, there are plenty more. Gen. BURNSIDE takes the responsibility, and confesses his incompetency. Somebody did not send on the pontoons in season. Mr. LINCOLN shoulders the whole, and keeps everybody in his place, relying, it may be, on the forthcoming Proclamation, when the negroes are to do the fighting, while the army can go in and possess the land they will have conquered.

"Who would be free, himself must strike the blow."

If the sons of Africa want their freedom, they are at liberty to get it, if they can. Mr. LINCOLN will not hinder them. It is a sublime power to wield, when one man, by the stroke of his pen, can set free four millions of slaves.

Still, it may be necessary for free white men to do some fighting. Were the negroes all free or all exterminated, there are still six millions of white population in the Southern States. Half a million of them are in arms, and every day growing better soldiers. They have a President who is a statesman and a soldier, and such Generals as LEE, JOHNSTON, BEAUREGARD, LONGSTREET, JACKSON, the HILLS, HARDEE, BRAGG, &c., who are certainly men of ability. Generals and soldiers are worthy, to say the least, of those with whom they fight. Whatever may be thought of the Southern cause, in Europe or America, there can be but one opinion of the zeal, courage and ability with which it is defended. Brave men respect the brave. I think McCLELLAN, POPE, BANKS and BURNSIDE must have a hearty respect for the officers and soldiers of the rebel army in Virginia. Doubtless, with some exceptions, the respect is mutual. When men have fought and are beaten into a mutual respect for each other, there is the basis of a good understanding.

The Times correspondent makes an important revelation in his last letter,—important if true. He says that counterfeit parole certificates are sold to Union soldiers at twenty-five cents a piece, and have been furnished by thousands, so that there are far more Northern men at home under parole than were ever taken prisoners. If men can be killed off, or placed hors du combat in this fashion, at their own cost, the National army may be easily beaten. Capt. Bobadil's method was not nearly so expeditious. But as this is a game that two can play at, why not send some sharp fellows into the Confederate lines to parole a few thousand of LEE's ragged soldiers? If the Southerners are as anxious to avoid service as these stories represent the Northern troops, their whole army might be paroled, leaving our troops to march "into the bowels of the land without impediment."

The rumor of another attempt at mediation on the part of the Emperor, comes in the Times' Paris correspondence this morning. Mr. DAYTON has had a special interview, and the Emperor, I presume, has asked his opinion whether the result of the action at Fredericksburgh would be likely to dispose the National Government to accept his friendly offices. The correspondent tells us that the English Government still resolutely refuses to join in any manner of interference. There are several reasons for this, which I have heretofore adverted to. The St. Lawrence is frozen. The Navy Department is behindhand with the iron-clads. The cotton-spinners are in no hurry. The North is not sufficiently exhausted. Probably the strongest reason of all is, that the support of CORDEN and BRIGHT are wanted in the coming session by the Palmerston administration.

While the cotton operatives in Lancashire are being fed by charity, the mill-owners are doing well, and mill property has not in years brought higher prices. Goods are high, and the cotton lords feel sure of an abundant supply of the raw material when their present stocks shall have been sold at high prices. They are making money doubly—by double prices for goods in hand, and by saving of wages. If you could sell a heavy stock of old papers at double price, and had no printing expenses to pay, you could make money. England is satisfied for the present, and trustful for the future. English agents are buying cotton in the South, and appear sure of getting it when it is wanted.

In France there has been a loud call made for help for the operatives of Lyons, but the French do not give like the English. Their organization of charities is entirely different. In great emergencies it is the Government that acts—and acts promptly and efficiently. Some millions of francs are to be appropriated to furnishing work to the needy. This seems to me much better than the English system of Parish relief and subscriptions. Work is better than alms, and the burden, whatever it may be, of a national calamity, should fall upon the whole nation alike, and be borne by each according to his ability.

There is, as you will have perceived, very little of interest here. You do not care for the affairs of Greece, Italy or Prussia. Not much probably about the marriage of the Prince of Wales. The disposition to be made of 130,000 criminals will occupy the attention of Parliament at its approaching session.

The Sumter has been sold at Gibraltar to an Englishman, for $19,000. The right to her, it is expected, will be disputed by the American frigate that has been watching her, but will claim the convoy of a British man-of-war. There is some grumbling about blockades of British ports and stoppage of British steamers bound for the West Indies with supplies for the South, but the Government will not, of course, protest against the exercise of the very right of search they have always claimed and defended. I am really too anxious about the news by the steamer now due to write more. Would that we had the Atlantic Telegraph in operation, and could know each day's events as they are occurring.

NOW-YORK.

Mr. Russell, the Times Correspondent, on American Blockading.

From the Army and Navy Gazette.

Whether this war, which gratifies the vanity of the Americans of the North by the interest it creates in Europe, is to continue for the next five years, or to end in a month, whether it is to lead to servile insurrection or to a consolidation of the Slave Power; whether it is to become a series of guerrilla contests, to lead to a bellum civile in omni bello, or to array the whole of the disunited States in a grand battle line against some alien enemy, are matters beyond the scope of conjecture. Fancy refuses to dwell in a realm so fantastical as the American "to-morrow." And it must be admitted that the reflections of those on this side of the channel, who declared that the North would not do this, or the South could not do that, have turned out to be as fallacious as the assertions of Mr. SEWARD that the rebellion would be put down in ninety days, or as the assumption of the Southern statesmen that the Northerners would never have the courage to strike the blow for the integrity of the Union. While we are speculating here on the future movements of Unionist or Secessionist, events may have occurred which will have rendered the most ingenious hypothesis ridiculous; but it cannot be maintained in the face of recent occurrences, that the Confederate Generals possess the transcendant military merits which their friends have claimed for them, or that they have known how to give their cause the usufruct of victory—which is peace. There is almost reason to think that the praise which has been bestowed on LEE, JACKSON, STUART and BEAUREGARD, was the measure of the pedantic slowness and frigidity of McCLELLAN, the misfortunes of McDOWELL, the empty imbecility of POPE, and the utter failure of BURNSIDE; because, after all, there is no sign or token that any or all of the Confederate leaders have done anything but follow events, and make good use of the energy, resource, and bravery of their soldiers in resisting the crude and unscientific demonstrations of their enemy. To stand and fight has been their great strategy. Not one of them seems to have made a campaign with a purpose; not one has had the capacity to understand the value of victory. The whole operations of the campaign are like the sparks which cut their way backwards and forwards through the embers of paper half consumed by fire. STUART may be a Virginian MURAT, and JACKSON may be a NEY, after his kind; but assuredly there is more of WELLINGTON than of NAPOLEON in LEE, even though he be as incessant in battle. Think what the great Corsican would have done, or MARMONTOR, or any officer of European celebrity in the last few centuries, who had before him a beaten army, a hostile capital, a rich expanse of States denuded of troops and filled with opulent cities; in his rear a vast country, desolate indeed by war, but faithful to the last drop of blood, and in his hand ragged legions of bold and courageous soldiers, who at a word could march from one extremity of the enemy's dominions to the other, and dictate their terms at the point of their bayonets! Can any one say the thing is impossible? Assuredly this and much more could be done by any great General, and all the world would recognize in such an accomplishment a proof of military genius such as has made or saved empires. After all said and done, the Americans must be pretty much like other people. Although they have not now, as they had in the War of Independence, the assistance of a country of soldiers like France, they cannot have so much degenerated as to be unable or unwilling to march and fight. And troops which can do both are capable of effecting anything the hands of competent leaders. As yet the world has never seen anything comparable to the insignificance in results of the battles fought over there with enormous masses of men on both sides. Happily the loss of life has not been in proportion to the numbers engaged, according to the European standard of average encounters; but that again may arise from the remarkable powerlessness of pursuit which has characterized the conduct of the war. A writer who describes the battle of Fredericksburgh as "a vendetta of artillery," from actual observation of the behavior of the Federal troops, excites by his account still more our wonder at the extraordinary apathy of the victorious Confederates. But, at the same time, one can understand why Gen. BURNSIDE preferred to view the scene from the verandah of Phillips House, on the north side of the Rappahannock—wondering, no doubt, all the while "qui le diable il allait faire dans ce galère"—to leading an Old Guard charge to save the fortunes of the day; or imitating the indiscreet conduct of St. Arnaud, Lord Raglan, Sir George Brown, Sir De Lacy Evans, or the rest of them, in the affair of the Alma, to which—save in results and the conduct of the troops—Fredericksburgh bore considerable resemblance. In common with Eastern nations, the Americans possess the faculty of standing still when they are not pursued. They dislike useless exertion, and learned at Bull's Run the folly of running from an imaginary enemy. But let some leader arise on either side who can keep his eyes straight in front of him when his time comes, and can lead a few squadrons to press one of these broken armies, and the war will not long languish in a bloody trail of gigantic skirmishes. West Point is the aride nutrix of incapables—the most conspicuous failure as a training-school for soldiers the world has ever seen. And if it be true that a General, like a poet, is born, not made, it must be admitted that as yet the New World has not been visited by the terrible genius to whom is due the parentage of conquerors and heroes. Very brave, very learned, very strategical men, she has seen born to her; nay, some very dashing—others very cautious—excellent leaders of division, brigade, regiment or squadron, but not one, so far as can be yet discovered here, with the true stamp of the ense ardens about him.

The Sale of the Sumter, and What Followed.

From the London Times.

The following letter has been received in Liverpool:

GIBRALTAR, Wednesday, Dec. 31, 1862.

The past week has been one of more than usual excitement, owing to the movements of two vessels in this bay, the renowned steamer Sumter (rechristened the Gibraltar,) and the Northern States vessel-of-war Chippewa. It seems that the Confederate Government, finding that the Sumter, which was solely built for a merchant vessel, was not sufficiently strong for firing her heavy armament, detained upon this port, in consequence, she was duly advertised by CURRAN, WILSON & Co., of Liverpool, as being for sale by auction, at Gibraltar, on the 19th of this month, and at noon of that day the bidding commenced, the opposition being principally between some Cadiz merchants, a company here, and a Liverpool merchant, who, having previously sent over competent men to survey machinery and hull, anticipated a nice bargain, it being supposed that the vessel would sell very low, and only required transporting to England to realize 50 per cent. profit. The sale was attended by crowds, and great excitement followed each bid, as the different nationalities appeared in opposition. After the lapse of an hour and a quarter the hammer finally settled the Englishman as the buyer at the price of $19,500, the purchaser having also to pay the Government commission of 2½ per cent. on the price. During the auction, as a stimulus to the bidders, the auctioneer announced the intention of the Confederate Government to give ten for nothing the battery on board, (not of much value, however,) to the lucky purchaser became the owner of a fully-equipped man-of-war. As commerce, and not war, was his object, he has got rid, I believe, of the guns to some darkish neighbors not twenty miles off from this place, and by the aid of paint has completely changed the appearance of the Sumter, which vessel now bears Gibraltar on her sterns. The Gibraltar is a vessel suitable for the Baltic, Mediterranean, or other trades requiring only a few days' coal; into this she will no doubt be turned, and if only half as smart as her former self, she will soon repay her cost. She is now being got ready to leave for England as soon as her papers are complete. I have only now related the movements of one vessel. The excitement, however, here was caused by the doings of the other, the Northern vessel Chippewa, whose Captain has been heard to say that, if possible, he would sink the Gibraltar, no matter if she carried the British flag. It appears that the Northerners pretend that the Sumter was a war prize, captured in New-Orleans by the Southerners, and that consequently she was not a British port vessel, under the Queen's protection, forbidding such sales, by either Northern or Southern States; this, however, is entirely a mistake, as the Sumter's officers assert she was properly bought from her owners in New-Orleans, and duly paid for by the Confederate Government. The fact of her being in the New-Orleans and Havana trade, and entirely owned in those places, utterly disproves the charge of her being a prize; and for the credit of the Northern agents it is to be hoped that they were ignorant of these facts when stating the contrary. Acting on his threats, (which, however, her new owner treats as bunkum,) the Captain of the Northern ship gets up steam each time he sees the same leaving from the Gibraltar's pipe, fearing lest the unarmed foe might elude his grasp. This, however, will not be attempted until all is ready for sea, when the company of a British ship-of-war will be sought to prove that the Gibraltar can never be captured. One day, the engineer of the Gibraltar, wishing to try the engines, got permission of the Captain of the Port to steam about in the bay, and directly after starting she was followed by the Chippewa, evidently, however, being no match in speed, with guns shotted and men at quarters, ports open; and it appearing to the officers in the garrison that she was going to violate English rules and regulations, which they break through when no fleet opposes them, the Governor, an old Crimean hero, not to be trifled with by such try, went himself to the batteries, determined at once to punish severely any attempt to interfere in English waters with the Gibraltar, which made all hearts to wish we had many more of such men to cause the British flag and waters to be respected. Nothing was, however, done by the Yankee, and the Gibraltar, having tested her machinery as much as required, returned to her anchorage; the Yankee, however, seeing his inferiority in speed, instead of going back to his old quarters, anchored two miles nearer the point, which position he kept until driven a few days after to alter it, owing to a gale. We notice, oddly enough, the feeling here is entirely with the Northerners, owing, no doubt, to the interested bombast and very small deeds of the Northern Yankees in the Northern States year-round. Nassau entered the harbor, and anchored near the Gibraltar. These two expensive standards upon the Gibraltar mark cost Uncle Sam fully $300 per diem. Her Britannic Majesty's ships Leander and Mars are daily expected here from Malta, and will probably escort the Gibraltar to England.

President Lincoln and the Emancipation Society.

The Secretary of the British Emancipation Society has received the following communication from Mr. ADAMS, the United States Minister, acknowledging the receipt of the address agreed upon at the great meeting held in the British Institution, Cowper-street, City-road, on New-Year's eve, forwarded to him for transmission to President LINCOLN:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
LONDON, Jan. 5, 1863.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your letter of the 3d instant, transmitting an address to the President of the United States, unanimously adopted at a great meeting of the working classes of London on the 31st of December last. I shall take great pleasure in complying with the desire of the Executive Committee to have this address forwarded to the President. Neither do I entertain a doubt that he will receive it as an encouraging testimonial of independent witnesses to the manner in which he is endeavoring to do his duty to his country and to mankind.

I remain your obedient servant,
C. F. ADAMS.

F. W. CRUMP, Esq., Hon. Sec., &c.

THE M'DOWELL COURT OF INQUIRY.

Testimony of Gen. Barry and Gen. Fitz-John Porter.

Special Report for the New-York Times.

FORTY-EIGHTH DAY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, Jan. 20, 1863.

Brig.-Gen. Barry called by the Court.

Question—What is your rank in the army?

Answer—I am Major of Artillery in the Army of the United States, and a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. I was on duty in March and April of last year, and was Chief of Artillery in the Army of the Potomac, commanded by Maj.-Gen. McClellan. In February, 1862, I think it was, in connection with Gen. Barnard, Chief Engineer of the Army of the Potomac, I made a report stating the number of troops—infantry—necessary for garrisoning the forts around Washington, for the defence of that city. The artillery force left by Maj.-Gen. McClellan for the defence of Washington were: Seven field batteries, making about thirty-two guns, left in camp about half a mile east of the Capitol. Besides these, were the forts and their armaments and garrisons, the strength of which I am unable to state, as I was relieved of the command of them about that time by Gen. Doubleday, to enable me to accompany the Army of the Potomac to the Peninsula.

Of the field batteries that I have spoken of, three were fully equipped and ready for service; three others were equipped, with the exception of horses, of which there was an insufficient number; and the remaining one, the Sixteenth New-York, was entirely unequipped, but there was plenty of material in the arsenal to equip it at short notice, and horses could also have been supplied in an hour. It was not the intention to withdraw any of these batteries to the Army of the Potomac, and none were withdrawn.

These batteries were manned as fully as usual, the complement of men for a battery hardly ever being full. With the exception of the Sixteenth New-York Battery, these batteries had all been under instructions for about two months—some of them nine months. They were all volunteer batteries—none of them regular.

Those batteries had once been supplied with horses, but at the last hour a division was made up for Gen. Casey, and I was required to furnish it with the usual number of batteries, and instructed horses were withdrawn from the batteries that were to be left for the defence of Washington, to supply the deficiencies in the batteries fitted out for Gen. Casey.

I speak of the condition of these batteries from an actual inspection made by myself about the middle of March, and also from an official return made to me by the officer of the camp, where these batteries were on the 3d of April. This return was made to me by mistake, the batteries not then belonging to the Army of the Potomac.

Questions by Gen. McDowell—I do not know that Gen. Wadsworth understood that these batteries had been left as a part of his command, three days after the departure of the Peninsular expedition. I know, through the complaint of an officer connected with one of the batteries, that within eight or ten days after the embarkation of the Army of the Potomac, Gen. Wadsworth unmanned one of the batteries, and sent the men to Fort Washington, where they now are.

Maj.-Gen. F. J. Porter called by the Court.—My present rank in the army is Major-General of Volunteers and Major of Fifteenth United States Regulars. I was in command of the present Fifth Corps of the Army of the Potomac, under Gen. Pope, in Virginia, in August last. The corps was composed of a division of regulars, a division of volunteers, and a small division of volunteers, occasionally detached. I saw Gen. McDowell twice on the morning of the 29th—once at Manassas Junction, and again about three miles from the Junction, on the road to Gainesville. The first time was about 9 o'clock; the second time, I presume, between 11 and 12. Gen. McDowell's corps, at those times, was situated as follows: Gen. King's Division had been assigned to my command by Gen. Pope at Manassas, Rickett's Division, I was informed by Gen. McDowell, was near Manassas, I think in the neighborhood of Bristol, Reynold's Division was in the vicinity of Groveton, on the turnpike. At the second time I saw Gen. McDowell, Gen. King's Division was immediately in the rear of my corps, on the road to Gainesville. Gen. McDowell had no command over me prior to the 29th of August. On that day, Gen. McDowell exercised authority over me by virtue of an order from Gen. Pope, addressed jointly to Gen. McDowell and myself. Our commands being united, he necessarily came into command by the Articles of War. I would say to the Court that the question leads into matters recently examined by another Court in my case, and out of delicacy to Gen. McDowell as well as to myself, I would rather be excused from answering the question any further.

(The Court not excusing the witness, he proceeded:)

That joint order refers to a previous order given to me on the 29th. In obedience to this previous order, I was moving toward Gainesville when I received the joint order. I had at that time received notice of the enemy being in front, and I had captured two prisoners. My lines were at that time formed, and we were marching toward Gainesville, when Gen. McDowell arrived with his copy of the joint order. An expression of opinion was then given by Gen. McDowell, that the position I was then in was no place to fight a battle—that I was too far out. This expression I considered an order, and I accordingly stopped further progress towards Gainesville for a short time. Gen. McDowell left me suddenly, not replying to a question from me, to the effect of what I should do, and with no understanding on my part as to how I should be governed. I returned to my command, and seeing the enemy gathering in my front I sent an officer to Gen. King's Division, requesting him to remain where he was. I subsequently received a message from Gen. McDowell to remain where I was—that he was going to the right, and was going to take King with him. He did go to the right, taking King with him, as I supposed, to take a position to the left of Reynolds. I remained where I was. When Gen. McDowell left me I did not know at first where he had gone. No troops were in sight, and I knew the position of Reynolds and Sigel, who were on our right, merely by the sound of Sigel's cannon, and information received on the subject. I did not think that the order which I implied in Gen. McDowell's expression that I was too far out, &c., was a proper order, and for that reason, when Gen. McDowell left me as he did, I proceeded as if I had not seen the joint order, but acted upon the previous order from Gen. Pope, which was to march upon Gainesville, to prevent a junction of Longstreet and Jackson, who were then near Groveton. That order directed me to move quickly, or we would lose much. That order had been seen by Gen. McDowell, and when he altered it it seemed that he had the authority, and I presumed he knew more fully than I did the plans of Gen. Pope. That joint order contemplated forming a line connecting with the troops on the right, and I presumed that Gen. McDowell, when he took King's Division from me, intended to act accordingly. I have no reason to doubt—never had any reason to suspect anything whatever in Gen. McDowell, tending in any way to disqualify him from holding the command of an army, division, corps, or department.

Questions by Gen. McDowell.—I had no other reason for supposing that Gen. King's Division had been assigned to my command than that the order of Gen. Pope to take King's Division with me in marching upon Gainesville, and the verbal information given me by Gen. Gibbons, the bearer of the order.

At Manassas Gen. McDowell spoke of King's Division as having been assigned to me, and spoke of it with regret. I have no recollection of anything further being said at that place with reference to King's Division. I think Gen. McDowell learned of the transfer of Gen. King's Division from Gen. Gibbons. When I received the joint order, before mentioned, I was at the head of my column, forming a line in front, on the Manassas road to Gainesville. The order of the divisions in my column at that time were: First, Morrell's, and next, Sykes', Sturgis' and Ayat's Brigades I knew nothing of at that time, they having been left at Manassas Junction with orders to hurry up as fast as possible. I left King's Division getting provisions and ammunition at Manassas Junction, with orders also to move up as quickly as possible. The expression of Gen. McDowell which I considered an order, in connection with the conversation attending it, and the taking of Gen. King from me, I did obey, for the latter reason—the taking of King's Division from me. The conversation was with reference to moving over to the right, which would necessarily check an advance. I did not consider the expression of Gen. McDowell that I was too far out, &c., as an order at the time it was made, but an expression of opinion that I might construe to an order. But when Gen. McDowell left me without giving an answer to my last inquiries as to what I should do, I considered myself at liberty to act according to my own discretion, and to withdraw or not as I saw fit. When I found that King's Division had been taken away from me, I decided that I could not safely advance any further.

Without concluding the cross-examination of Gen. Porter, the Court adjourned.

DOWN THE MISSISSIPPI.

A Group of Rebel Prisoners—The Shores of the Great River—Passing Fort Pillow—Memphis—Arrival at Helena—Preparations for the Vicksburgh Wounded, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HELENA, ARK., STEAMER BLACK, Friday, Jan. 9, 1863.

"Going down the river" is not a very pleasant thing these warlike days, and nothing but the thought of our brave soldiers, wounded and dying, before the intrenchments at Vicksburgh, would have called out the little party who steamed down the river on Monday last, and are now lying off the levee of this dreary little town. Our brave soldiers, who give their lives for us, surely we can risk some sensations for them. The first thing to be done after you are well bestowed upon the boat is to explore the place that is to be your habitation, for some days at least, and certain ominous thumpings and pounding on the roof seemed to demand attention at once. We had hardly raised the trap-door opening on the hurricane deck, and taken a view of the occupants, when we were greeted with the startling question, "Are you Southern in your feelings?" The charge was, of course, indignantly denied. "I am, and I'm a prisoner," said the gentleman who made the inquiry, and then the whole group gathered about to listen. They were all going down to Cairo, and there we left them the next day with their escort, from the Thirty-seventh Iowa, the new Greyhound Regiment, as it is called—as all the men are about middle age. They were a contrast to the forlorn-looking men they were guarding, who talked, most of them, in the usual strain, of the wrongs they suffered, and the rights they are fighting for. A few only, of all the number, could talk with any coolness of the war or the Yankees.

The river below Cairo is full of interest; and here, too, begins the first slight consciousness of danger, which adds not a little relish to the scene. The tumbling-down cabins of Fort Prentice on Bird's Point, opposite to Cairo, showed that the tide of war had flowed over and beyond it, and the solitary Butternut who stood upon the bank looked as if he might be the last remnant of the rebels. Here, too, we began to meet steamboats, with saucy little cannon peeping out on the lower deck, suggestive of guerrillas, masked batteries and other things not pleasant to mention. The battle-field at Belmont looked sad and desolate in the gray twilight, and it was dark when we floated in under the shadow of the cliff at Columbus, without any fear of Bishop Polk's chains and torpedoes. On the shore lay two anchors which once belonged to the Merrimac, and by some strange chance have found their way round here. We had on board a character, in the shape of an intelligent contraband, who knew the whole river—who had been the drum-major of a band in a rebel regiment, and still sported his gray uniform, adorned with the "lone star" button of Mississippi. His wonderful experience and vast information was only equaled by his intense condescension, but he proved quite useful to us.

We came near being stopped at Columbus by the General commanding there. "I must take the boat for I want to put a soldier on for every two feet." Some delay, however, and a series of conversations and telegraphings, resulted in our passing off into the river again.

Island No. 10 was passed in the night; "but," added the contraband drum-major, "I will show you Fort Pillow," and, true to his word, he rushed wildly into the cabin not long after with "Here we are at Fort Pillow"—and there it was.—A long line of cliffs commanding all the river, and lower down and nearer the water were the fortifications, the piles of sandbags still lying on them, but so matted down they looked like rows of stone. It has a magnificent position for a fort. The soldiers' tents crown the cliffs, and as the boat neared shore, the sloping sides are alive with them, running, jumping, and occasionally riding down to hear what is the news from Vicksburgh. Of the news from Vicksburgh, we would give much to know ourselves. There is nothing for them to hear from us but a rumor that we are—not victorious, at least; and so, throwing them all our newspapers, we pass on down the river. For many miles back we had been watching the shore, knowing that guerrillas "are found in this neighborhood," as the geography says; but at Fulton, a few miles below Fort Pillow, we found they had been within seven miles of the river, burning cotton and conscripting every one. The group of passengers whom we had left on the levee hovered nervously about their little piles of luggage, knowing that any moment the guerrillas might make a raid and take them all. We had hardly passed before the boat was signaled from the other side by two men sitting by a little fire on the shore; but the Captain knew their tricks and cunning, and shook his head, saying: "I know too much to stop." His boat has been in three battles, and bears many marks of the fight yet on the furniture and through the walls, and he feels like holding his breath and listening for the rattling of the balls. But whatever happens, we know we shall not be surrendered, as is too much the fashion now-a-days. There are arms for all the crew and many of the passengers, perhaps, so we shall have a warm reception for the guerrillas.

Remnants of burning cotton are seen floating on the water and we steam along the shore all the way down to Memphis, and we begin at last to think we are in Dixie. Memphis is decidedly a secession place. "Union people's pretty scarce here," said the intelligent contraband. Merchants have refused to take the oath, and so their stores and warehouses have been closed, but speculators and business men are coming now from the North and West to take their places, and a great cotton traffic is carried on between Memphis and St. Louis. The cotton buyers are known as a class, and even own boats on the river, and no love is felt for them by the soldiers. The parties who steal on other service preserve the cotton to sell to them, have spies to protect them, and on these excursions many brave fellows have lost their lives. That, at least, is the story told down here. Memphis is a beautiful city, but begins to look stingy and faded from the effects of the war. In the park is seen a singular proof of the lengths to which secession will carry people. Under JACKSON's statue is the inscription: "The Federal Union must be preserved." But the word Federal has been scratched out with a file. We were told that it was done by a (Yankee) rebel Colonel. While we lay at Memphis, waiting for our orders, the guerrillas were busy much nearer than we thought, and of all their daring outrages this seems the most audacious. Directly opposite the city, under the very eyes of our army, the guerrillas sailed a little steamer which is in Government employ. They were in United States uniform and the boat landed promptly, and they asked to be allowed to go up six miles as passengers. They were no sooner on board, however, than they surrounded the crew, compelled them to take them 18 miles up to meet a boat load of Government stores coming from St. Louis. They boarded it, overpowered the crew—not a very valiant act, perhaps, as there were only six guerrillas—then lashed the boats together and burnt them, first sending the crew ashore in a yawl. We were thankful we had not been decoyed where we heard they.

Not many hours had passed before we received orders to leave our boat, and prepare to go down to Helena. No news from Vicksburgh yet, but plenty of rumors, and many fears that batteries had been planted this side of our forces, and communication is cut off. It was in the gray dawn that we left Memphis, and glided down between the low desolate shores of Arkansas and Mississippi. There are few houses in sight, and no sign of life but the flocks of wild duck that are startled from the water by the splashing of our wheels. The sand-bars and the fog do not enliven the scene, and we can fancy the cotton-wood thickets alive with gray-coated guerrillas. We know that there is a great deal of contraband traffic carried on with little skiffs, and recognize them all along the shore as old acquaintances, hid up mysteriously in some little nook. So the day wears away till the Captain electrifies us by calling to us that a gunboat is in sight coming up the river, and we are all on the guards to hear the news from Vicksburgh. A steamboat and tug are with the gunboat, both riddled with musket-balls, and the little tug, the only one that seems to take any notice of us, comes puffing and panting up to hail, whatever know, to ask for papers and to tell us news from Vicksburgh. The Captain shouts to us from his little craft, "Troops all up at Napoleon—some secret movements to be made. My engineer was shot coming up last night. The wounded from Vicksburgh are at White River"—and his last words are lost in the rush of water round the little tug, as she pants back to the gunboat again; and we look after him bewildered with the news he brings. We do not land at all now. Passengers for way stations must go on with us to Helena. We are signaled from the shore to stop, but take no notice, and a moment after, the smoke of burning cotton rises from that very spot. We have no desire to be taken prisoners and have the boat burnt, and lose the dispatches we had for the General at Helena, into whose hands they were given in safety soon after. If you have never been at Helena, take a friend's advice and never go if you can [illegible] Literary.

SCRIBNER & Co. are just about to put in press a new scientific work by C. L. BRACE—the Races of the Old World, or a Manual of Ethnology. The work, though a duodecimo only, is designed to give to the usual students of history a brief compendium of all the latest information, collected from a vast variety of sources, on the different races of men.

It contains the latest results with regard to the races of Europe, Asia, Africa and Oceanica.

The classification is made entirely on a linguistic and historical basis. The general plan followed by the author is the classification made by MAX MULLER, BUNSEN, and others. On the African races, LIVINGSTONE, BARTH, and the American missionaries, are the chief authorities.

The question of unity or diversity of origin is discussed at length, as well as that of the Egyptian chronology and Norman antiquity.

It is believed that there is no work in the English language investigating these subjects in so brief a form.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE COOPER UNION.

The Most Successful Year Since its Inauguration—It is now Self-Supporting—What is Done in It.

The Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art, the design and object of which are, as most of our readers know well, the dissemination of useful knowledge among the working classes, is in a more flourishing condition to-day than ever before. The splendid edifice was erected and supplied with all the apparatus and appliances requisite for such a purpose by the munificence of PETER COOPER. The building is one among the principal architectural ornaments of this City; and as an educational institution, it is unequaled in its somewhat peculiar sphere. Until Mr. COOPER completed and dedicated this, the greatest and best enterprise of his life, to the objects named, it was rare that those of limited means, however anxious they might be to acquire a knowledge of some of the higher branches of education, could obtain tuition in studies not named in the regular course taught in our public schools. Since the opening of this institute all who desire, and particularly those who work for their own support, can avail themselves, free of charge, of all the advantages the institution affords. Those only are supposed to pay anything who are abundantly able, or praise to do so. For those who can attend during the day there are teachers there to form them into classes, and teach them. For those who work during the day there are evening classes, and the teaching there is as extensive and thorough as the other.

The erection of the building was commenced in 1853 and finished in 1856, at a cost of about $650,000; and it has been open ever since to all who desired to avail themselves of its advantages. Until within the past year the receipts have not equaled the expenditures—the yearly deficits having been made up from Mr. COOPER's private funds. It must be exceedingly gratifying to all friends of education to know that now it is self-supporting—that it is on a paying basis, although but barely so. The receipts during the past year amounted to $19,453 82, and the expenditures to $19,276 50—leaving a balance in the treasury of $177 32.

The building is six stories high, the first two of which are rented as stores and offices, from which, together with the large hall below, the revenues of the institution are derived. The other four stories are devoted to the great objects for which the building was erected. On the third floor is the large reading room, which is open from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M., and free to [illegible] Mr. Ferguson said that he had sold a house in Forty-second-street for $2,500, but would not be able to get the money before ten days, and that, in the meantime, he would like to borrow $1,000, which he would return with interest at the end of that time; Mrs. Carter replied that her money was in the Savings Bank; that if she drew it out then she would lose three months' interest, to which Mr. Ferguson replied that he would reimburse her for all the interest she would lose by the operation; Mrs. Carter showed some hesitation about granting the request, saying withal, Mr. Ferguson said: "Why, sister Carter, you certainly need be afraid of me, I am worth from $20,000 to $30,000; you know I own that house in Carmine-street, which is clear from all incumbrance, besides all my property, and I only want the money for ten days, until I get the returns of the Forty-second-street property that I have just sold" &c., &c. Upon these representations, whenever said she finally consented to lend him the money; the said it was money that she had earned before she was married by working hard night and day for years, and that she had saved it up unbeknown to any of her family in order that she might be sure and have something to help herself with in her old age, when she might not be able to help herself; having the utmost confidence in Mr. Ferguson as an honest man and a Christian, and relying upon his representations with regard to his property, she said she resolved to accommodate him, and accordingly the next day, the fifth of March, she went and drew the money from the bank, and took it over to his house, No. 48 Carmine-street; on arriving at the house, Mr. Ferguson asked her if she had drawn the money from the bank, to which she replied that she had, and took it out of her pocket and gave it to him; Ferguson then said, "Now recollect, this is only for ten days," and sit down and wrote a note for the amount; such was her confidence in him; she said she would have loaned him twenty times the amount if she had had it; he had long been her class leader in the church, and she believed him to be a sincere Christian; the money had never been repaid to her; a mortgage was subsequently given for the amount on the house in Carmine-street, but it proved valueless, as it was preceded by two other mortgages which had been foreclosed, and left no balance.

Cross-examined—Has lived in South Second-street, Williamsburgh, since last December; moved there from the corner of North Eighth-street; lived at No. 10 Jones-street eight years; moved from there three years ago to Commerce-street; stayed there a few days, and then went to my son-in-law's, in Berrow-street; from there went to my mother-in-law's, at Poughkeepsie, and from there to my sister-in-law's, and thence to my relatives in Rome, N. Y.; returned to New-York the 20th of September following (1861) took rooms in Commerce-street, and subsequently opened a boarding-house; kept the boarding-house about three months, and subsequently went to Williamsburgh; don't know how long Mr. Ferguson had lived at No. 48 Carmine-street when he got my money; Mr. Ferguson told him that at the time he borrowed the money of Mrs. Carter he was in a very tight place, and that he wanted money to make repairs to his house; that at that time he had parties with all his property, except the house he lived in on Carmine-street, and that he was not in a situation to pay back any of the money he borrowed; I tried to prevail upon him to give up some Connecticut property, which he had made over to his wife, in order to pay the debt due Mrs. Carter, which he admitted he owed, and he agreed to do so, but never did it.

Cross-Examination.—Am a naturalist and taxidermist; have been a member of the Bedford-street Church for eleven years; I conducted the examination for Mrs. Carter before the Church Committee; Mr. Ferguson denied on that occasion that he made any representations about his property at the time he negotiated the loan; he denied that he told her he was worth $20,000; he denied almost everything; I was a witness before the Grand Jury; I took Mrs. Carter to my counsel, Mr. Hedge, to hear the complaint drawn up, at the suggestion of Rev. Mr. Newman.

At the close of Mr. Sheard's testimony the Prosecution rested their case, and it being 3 o'clock, the Court adjourned till 10 A. M. this morning, when Mr. Hull will open the case for the defence.

The Thumb-Warren Nuptials.

[illegible] PUTTER TO UNFOLD THE CEREMONY—GREAT ANXIETY ON THE PART OF THE ADULT POPULATION TO SEE THE PERFORMANCE.

Gen. THUMB grows nervous. His days of single blessedness are rapidly melting away, and ere another moon has waned his happiness for life or misery almost will have been secured. His fair and petite affianced hears the congratulations which are momentarily tendered her by the thousands who throng her levee, modestly and smilingly, and answers all questions with a conservative dignity becoming in one so shortly to become so exalted a position as that which awaits her.

The General, whose wealth is tangible, is most liberal in his bridal gifts. Thousands of easily-earned dollars are expended by him in diamonds, laces and trinkets for the adornment of his little sugar plum. The diamonds, valued at $5,000, are on exhibition at HALL, BLACK & Co.'s, and can be seen by any one who will take the trouble to call there. The truly superb diamond ring, he says, at Lean & Taylor's, its value we do not know, but rumor places the figure far up in the thousands.

The General, who is a traveled man, is determined to be married in state as well as church. Casting his eyes nationally around the ministerial horizon, he detected the courtly form and benign visage of the reverend Episcopal Bishop of this Diocese, Rev. Dr. Potter, D.D., LL.D., to whom he applied for professional assistance. The venerable Bishop, who, like the General, "has traveled and seen the Queen," at once kindly consented to make the little pair man and wife, and the day being appointed, he generously suggested his own church—Trinity Chapel—as the appropriate place for the ceremony. Assisted by Rev. Mr. Winer, of St. John's Church, Bridgeport, the Bishop will marry them on the 19th of February.

Little Nere is in the dumps. He finds chagrined to think that Tattum should best him in the matrimonial race, and is by far the most wretched specimen of happy mortals we have seen in a long time. He has lost his appetite as well as his sweetheart, wanders moodily through his apartments, and practices with the broadsword daily, seeking no amusement save that he can be obtained from an innocent game of solitaire.

He is a magnanimous little chap, however, and with Miss WARREN's sister will accompany Gen. Tattum and his bride to the altar.

The rush to see these Lilliputians is enormous; the demand for tickets to the ceremony is worse, and the General, who is really annoyed at the publicity of the affair, refers every one who applies for a pass to his Secretary.

The little folks are really very happy, and it is a [illegible]

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

There seems to be no longer any reason to doubt that the Army of the Potomac, or at least a portion of it, has once more crossed the Rappahannock, prepared to make another effort to defeat the main rebel army in Virginia. We have very direct confirmation of this fact, both from our Special Correspondent, who announces the movement of the Army, writing on Thursday, and from the rebels themselves—advices from Richmond to the 20th having reached us, embodying positive statements that a portion of our army had then already crossed, both above and below Fredericksburgh. The rumors of fighting which have reached us from Washington may be premature, but we shall no doubt soon receive details of another great struggle on the Rappahannock. A still further assurance of this may be found in the Address of Gen. BURNSIDE to his Army, published among our dispatches. It is dated the 20th (Tuesday), and announces in positive terms that another movement against the enemy was about to commence. The crossing probably took place on Wednesday, above Fredericksburgh, a simultaneous movement being made below as a feint, which, however, would be turned into a real attack, should circumstances justify it. It is possible, also, that a crossing might be again made at the City.

We have rebel news from North Carolina this morning which is important. The National forces are said to have driven in the rebel pickets at Kinston on the 15th, and were supposed to be advancing against the place in strong force, though it was conjectured that Gen. FOSTER's movement in that direction was merely a feint to cover more important movements toward Weldon or Wilmington. The iron-clads Montauk and Passaic were reported at Beaufort waiting for ammunition, preparatory to the attack on Wilmington. Some of our gunboats are reported to have attacked Fort Caswell on the 15th, but it was probably only a reconnoissance.

The seagoing qualities of our new "Monitors" have now been thoroughly tested, and are found to be everything that could be desired. The Weehawken, Capt. RODGERS, which left this port on Sunday last, was out in the late tremendous northeast gale, and weathered it in the most handsome manner. A dispatch has been received in this City from Commodore RODGERS, and is published in this morning's TIMES, announcing his arrival at Fortress Monroe, and speaking in the highest terms of the performance of his vessel. The Nahant, iron-clad, and the Lackawanna, are known to have found shelter during the gale inside the Delaware Breakwater.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate yesterday, a petition was presented, asking relief for the widow of THOMAS GIMBE, the original inventor of iron-clad vessels. A joint resolution was introduced, directing the Secretary of the Navy not to accept the title to Lagoo Island until Congress shall so direct. Two daughters of the late Commodore REMSHAW, and two sisters of the late Commander WAINWRIGHT, both killed at Galveston, sent in petitions asking for pensions. The Military Committee was instructed to inquire into the expediency of publishing monthly the names of all officers of the army who are absent on leave, with the date of the leave of absence, &c. The proposition to annul the treaties with the Sioux Indians was debated at some length, and then postponed until to-day. The bill to reimburse the State of Minnesota, for expenses incurred in defending the State against Indian outrages, was passed. Mr. WILSON's bill to provide for the greater comfort of sick and wounded soldiers was taken up and debated, but not disposed of. After an Executive Session, the Senate adjourned.

In the House, a bill was passed providing for a Deputy Register of the Treasury, with a salary of $2,000 per annum. The bill to provide ways and means for the support of the Government was then considered in Committee of the Whole. The second section was amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue four hundred millions in Treasury notes, bearing 5 per cent. interest, payable semi-annually in coin—the principal payable any time after three years from date. A new section was adopted, providing that after the first of March next, coupons of these bonds may be received for customs at any time thirty days before they become due. Before completing action on the clause taxing bank-note circulation, the bill was temporarily laid aside, and the members indulged in general debate until the adjournment.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, a message was received from Gov. SEYMOUR, in answer to a resolution from the Senate, regarding the Speakership difficulties in the Assembly. The Governor considers it improper for him to interfere, excepting at the request of the Assembly. The message was ordered to be printed, and the Senate soon afterward adjourned.

In the Assembly, after a speech from Mr. THOS. C. FIELDS, in which he claimed, in the face of the disgraceful proceedings of last week, that the Democratic Party was the party of law and order, Mr. DEAN rose and withdrew from the Speakership contest, and nominated Mr. TRIMMER, of Monroe, as the Democratic candidate. A motion to adjourn then came from the Republican side, and was carried. It is understood that Mr. CALLICOOT will not be withdrawn.

GENERAL NEWS.

Judging from the supplies which are going forward from Cincinnati, Gen. ROSECRANS' army is not likely to suffer just at present. Capt. GILL is shipping as rapidly as possible 1,000 large packages, comprising the following among other articles: 150,000 pairs of drawers, 100,000 shirts, 150,000 pairs of stockings, and 50,000 pairs of infantry trousers.

The Eastport, a formidable gunboat captured on the Tennessee River shortly after the capitulation of Fort Henry, completed at Cairo and then condemned because her keel was too weak to enable her to carry a sufficiently heavy armament, has been strengthened, and will soon receive her guns, when she will at once go into service.

The Adjutant-General of Connecticut, under date of Hartford, Jan. 20, has issued an order which reads thus: "In view of the small number of men required to fill the quota of this State under the two calls of the President for three hundred thousand men each, and, judging from present indications, the probability the requisite number will soon volunteer and join the regiments now in the field, all persons who by enlistment or draft, owe service to the State, and who have not been arrested, or who have not been mustered into the service of the United States, are hereby discharged from such service, and all warrants issued by authority from this department for the arrest of such persons are hereby revoked."

At a regular meeting of the Board of Councilmen, yesterday, a communication was received from the Comptroller relative to the indebtedness of the City incurred in appropriations for military purposes, and in the support of soldiers' families, and submitting the draft of a law by which the indebtedness can be paid off gradually, and with the least burden to tax-payers. The resolution accompanying the paper, in favor of an application to the Legislature for the passage of the law submitted by the Comptroller, was unanimously adopted. A statement of the Comptroller was submitted in accordance with a resolution of the Board, showing the receipts of the Sixth and Eighth-avenue railroads for the last four months to have been as follows: Sixth-avenue road for September, $28,922 74; October, $30,967 61; November, $27,785 15; December, $29,428 66; Eighth-avenue road for September, $31,022 23; October, $31,652 29; November, $29,555 35; December, $30,976 61. After some routine business the Board adjourned to Thursday next at 5 P. M.

In the Court of General Sessions yesterday, before Judge MCCUNN, the case of JOSE. B. FERGUSON, indicted for false pretences in obtaining $1,000 from a sister in the Bedford-street M. E. Church, was commenced, and occupied the entire day. The trial will be resumed at 11 o'clock this morning.

The turn of the Stock Market yesterday was downward on part of the Share list. Gold about 148; Exchange 163 ⅌ cent.

An active business was reported in Breadstuffs, yesterday, at a further slight improvement in prices. Pork and Beef were less active. Bacon and Lard were freely purchased, as were also Rice, Tallow, Whisky and Rio Coffee. Hay, Hops, Cotton and Tobacco were in fair demand. The changes in other articles were unimportant. The freight engagements were heavier, and rates firmer.

Mobs and Legislatures—Affairs at Albany.

One of the most sinister portents of the times is the advent of bullyism into the precincts of legislation. It has, as yet, shown itself most at Albany; but it is unmistakably present also at Harrisburgh and Trenton. Its aim is to overawe and intimidate. If allowed to proceed as it has begun, it will, in all likelihood, end in the destruction of all regular legislation; perhaps, in the dispersion of the Legislatures themselves.

The way the thing is managed is no secret in this State at least. The programme was taken from revolutionary France. First, we have what calls itself a "Democratic Union Association," at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-second-street, under the auspices of FERNANDO WOOD, which, in every essential respect, is the exact counterpart of the Club of the Cordeliers under MARAT in the revolutionary France of 1791, and of the Club of "The Rights of Man," under BLANQUI and RASPAIL, in the revolutionary France of 1848. Here is the great focus for heating the passions of the ignorant and vile against the existing Government. The most expert and unscrupulous demagogues that can be procured are, in quick succession, here brought up to the work of fomenting and stimulating faction. There is no misrepresentation, no sophistry, no invective, no ribaldry, no diabolical suggestion or appeal, that is not freely used for the furtherance of factious and revolutionary ends. The place is exactly what the French term the foyer of revolution.

In the train of this Club is a gang of the worst wretches that the omniscience of FERNANDO WOOD in New-York villainy has enabled him to scrape together—brawny, bull-necked, big-jawed, and thick-skulled, ever ready to lend themselves for pay to any work, however base or atrocious. It is these bullies, trussed up in broadcloth and watch-chains, that did the yelling, and hooting, and cursing, and fist-shaking last Friday, in the galleries and lobbies of the Assembly at Albany. Their business is to keep this body from organizing itself. FERNANDO, their master, is a candidate for the United States Senate. If the Constitution, which prescribes the first Tuesday of February for the election to that high place, is obeyed, he has no chance. It will be obeyed if the Assembly obtains an organization in time. He therefore uses these hirelings to thwart that object, and so keep his chance open for another year. Thus he seeks to override and frustrate the Constitution by violent means. In itself it is an essentially revolutionary procedure. There is virtually no difference between deliberately preventing the regular operation of the Constitution and a deliberate attempt to nullify and overthrow the Constitution.

But even if there were no constitutional requirement in the case—were the business in hand any act of ordinary legislation—the browbeating of these ruffians in the galleries would be none the less dangerous. It never should have been submitted to for a single minute. Had we a Governor properly alive to the dignity and security of the government he administers, it would have been put down on the spot, even if it had taken a military force to accomplish it. If the Assembly, while yet unorganized, has no Sergeant-at-Arms or official to protect it from violence or molestation, it is then the clear duty of the Executive branch to render effective aid—as clearly his duty as if the Court-room itself were similarly assailed. We do not accept the plea of the Governor for withholding this protection. It was his bounden duty to have proceeded to suppress that mob the instant its violent demonstrations came to his knowledge, without waiting for any formal request from the Assembly. That body, in its unorganized state, was in no condition to make a formal request, or to do any other serious act. It is known that the Governor was appealed to at an early stage of the violent proceedings, by individual members, for protection; and yet the violence was suffered to run on for hours without the slightest check. It is difficult to imagine that the Governor is really in earnest when he talks of the "impropriety" of interference by one coördinate branch in the "proceedings" of another. It was not the proceedings of the Assembly he was called upon to interfere with at all, but the proceedings of the mob encompassing the Assembly. That mob may style itself the Third House, but we take it that Gov. SEYMOUR is hardly yet prepared to recognize it as a "coördinate branch."

That riotous mass had no privileges or immunities which he was bound to respect. It was his duty, with or without any formal request from the beleaguered Assembly itself, to have rid it of that mob pressure, inasmuch as he alone had the means, and is by law the special guardian of public order. The mob that is sufficient to bully an unorganized House with impunity, will not hesitate, on occasion, to try the same thing upon the body when in full career. Acquiescence in these outrages is but preparing the way for yet more fearful and disgraceful scenes. It gives the largest encouragement to every revolutionary purpose; and no mortal man would be able to say what unparalleled enormity a month or even a week might not develop. In revolutionary days events oftimes chase each other with terrible rapidity to the final catastrophe.

It was on the 4th of May, 1848, that the French National Assembly first met. The representatives found themselves confronted in the galleries by delegates from the Clubs, in the same manner as was the Convention in the first Revolution. There the Club emissaries stood—the representatives of a mysterious power, an illegitimate rival, if not master, of the constituted authority itself—and showing by their demeanor that resolves had been made which they meant should be carried into execution. In just nine days from that time, in the midst of a regular sitting, the body of the hall was invaded by the creatures of the Clubs, armed with knives and pistols, and displaying the red flag. The President was driven from his chair, an armed artilleryman was installed in his place, and the National Assembly was declared dissolved. In six weeks every gutter in Paris ran blood.

Submission at Albany is inviting just such a sequel. The only safety is in putting down this attempted mob interference at once, and at any cost. It is this very contempt of constituted authority that an army of a million are fighting elsewhere; it cannot and must not be quietly borne with here at home. Yield to it, and there is no security left against the turbulent ambition and passions, which are every day becoming fiercer and more fearful. The rebels of the South have predicted from the start that insubordination and anarchy would sooner or later ensue here in the North. Upon that belief, more than any other one thing, save foreign intervention, they have founded their confidence of final success. Doubtless they are even now looking upon the panting and heaving floodgates as just ready to burst. So indeed it will prove, unless you look better to the checks. You will have chaos upon you ere you think it. An end must be made of this mob-power. We speak in no party interest. Mere political considerations are as nothing in the presence of this danger. Every man of every party, who is not a public enemy, is alike interested in the stoppage of these outrages.

DISCIPLINE OF THE ARMY.—One of our correspondents, writing on Monday from the headquarters of the left wing of the Army of the Potomac, sends us a number of the sentences passed by Court-martial upon offenders—which indicate the existence of a just and severe system of discipline in some of the army corps. One private soldier, "for misbehavior before the enemy," was sentenced to forfeit all pay due him, except just dues to his laundress (that is proper) and sutler, and all pay that may become due him during his term of service, and to be confined at hard labor. A like sentence was passed upon another man "for offering violence to his superior officer." A corporal, "for absenting himself from his company and regiment before the enemy at Fredericksburgh," was reduced to the grade of private, forfeited all pay due or that may become due, and was condemned to serve the balance of his term at hard labor. A man for "skulking during the battle of Fredericksburgh" was condemned to march before his regiment, having a board lashed to his back with the word "Coward" on it, and to be put to hard labor, with ball and chain attached to his leg.

For the good of the whole army, it is to be hoped that these sentences will be carried out to the letter. It would be better they had never been passed than that their execution should be held back. The fact of their being sternly carried out will have a great effect upon the whole army, while their neglect will only lead others to commit like offences with impunity. None of them are too severe. The authorities have heretofore invited military demoralization by leniency in the punishment of crime. Some of these highest crimes, such as skulking during battle, have heretofore been almost totally overlooked, and the consequence has been that during some engagements skulking has attained to fearful proportions. Let every soldier and officer, while in the service of his country, be, for the sake of his country, held to a rigid performance of his duty under the severest penalty. Thus only can an army be made efficient.

The Army of the Potomac.

The news, and the absence of news, from the Army of the Potomac, for the last few days, have been rather exciting. It has been so much the custom of the Government to withhold intelligence from the people when it was of a kind calculated to unduly affect their nerves, that the embargo on the telegraph from Falmouth and Washington has been taken as a pretty sure indication that a Battle was going on, and by the croakers that we had met with a disaster.

We give this morning letters from "Headquarters" as late as Tuesday night, news from Richmond to the same date, and an address from Gen. BURNSIDE to the army, also issued on Tuesday. Our correspondent states that the right and left wings of the army were on that day in motion, and that the crossing was to be made some ten miles above Falmouth. The Richmond papers of Tuesday report that our army was then over the Rappahannock, both above and below Fredericksburgh. The order of Gen. BURNSIDE "announces to the Army of the Potomac that they are about to meet the enemy once more;" and after referring to the late brilliant victories of our arms in the West, which we have already learnt have done so much to inspirit the Eastern army, he tells his troops that "the auspicious moment seems to have arrived to strike a great and mortal blow at the rebellion." The gallant BURNSIDE then calls upon officers and men for a firm and united action in the struggle, and expresses his trust in God for success.

These things, now three days old, settle the fact that our army, if not already engaged in battle, as announced from Washington yesterday, is on the very eve of the great encounter. BURNSIDE has never waited long to carry out his purposes or fulfill his promises; and we suspect that the issuing of this address was the very last thing he did before he gave the order to advance. This news will raise the anxiety of the whole country to the very highest pitch. Every hour will seem a day, every day a week. We trust the Government will permit us to receive prompt and true reports.

We have confidence still in that gallant army, which has fought so many battles, and fought them all well. We anticipate victory. May Heaven grant it.

THE POPE CAMPAIGN AND GEN. PORTER.—The public were greatly surprised yesterday to learn the decision of the Court in the case of Major-Gen. FITZ-JOHN PORTER. It was universally anticipated that he would be acquitted of the charges made against him by Gen. POPE—an anticipation probably based, in great measure, upon the impression that it was impossible to have any high officer of the army convicted and punished for any military offence whatever. Yet we think no one can have read carefully and unprejudicedly, the evidence given on the trial, which we have published very fully, without being convinced of the justice of the sentence he has received, in being cashiered and dismissed the service for disobedience of orders. PORTER was not disloyal in any sense of consciously aiding or abetting the treason of JEFF. DAVIS—and he was not on trial on any such charge—but, in the wide and deep significance of the word loyalty which implies faithfulness, truth and devotion to a superior—which superior in this case happened to be Gen. POPE—we think nothing can be clearer proven than that he was disloyal. It was not only in one nor in two instances that he offended, but he evaded, disregarded or disobeyed almost every one of the orders he received while acting under Gen. POPE. To attempt to assign as an excuse for his disobedience any motive whatever is preposterous; in a military and patriotic sense, his motives were necessarily bad. We are glad that in the first case in which an officer's culpability has been proven, punishment has followed; and we are rejoiced that the President has had courage to approve the sentence.

This decision, and the developments made on the trial, will affect greatly the public judgment as to who were the responsible parties for the disastrous failure of the Virginia campaign of Gen. POPE. No General in the service has been held up to such severe reprobation as POPE; but if a man whom that officer relied upon to carry out such an important part of the programme of operations as was assigned to Gen. PORTER, did "repeatedly and shamefully disobey, when peremptorily ordered into battle," then the former officer is certainly relieved from a heavy share of the odium which has been cast upon him for the failure at the second Bull Run.

A New National Product—Beet-Root Sugar.

One of the compensations growing out of the rebellion has been an extraordinary stimulus communicated to our industries, and the development of new sources of National prosperity and wealth.

One of the sources bids fair to be a plentiful supply of sugar from the beet. We have had an opportunity, recently, of examining several specimens of it in this City, which were manufactured at Chicago, from beets grown on the prairies of Illinois. The supply of sugar by the Mississippi being cut off by the embargo of that river, Mr. BELCHER, a well known sugar refiner in the West, turned his attention to the refining of syrup from the sorghum plant, which has now become a staple crop in Iowa and Illinois. It is estimated that 5,000,000 gallons of syrup were produced in the West the past year. To extend the source of supply of domestic sugars, Mr. BELCHER procured last Spring, from Europe, a supply of seeds of various kinds of the sugar beet, and by the agency of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, distributed them among the farmers on the line of that road, and through a range of 200 miles, with a view to ascertain the kind of soil and climate best adapted to the growth of the root.

The result, so far, has been of a most gratifying character. An analysis of several samples raised in the black prairie soil yielded from 9 to 13½ per cent. of saccharine matter. The samples of sugar produced were from liquor evaporated in an open pan, and although undoubtedly far inferior to what might have been produced by a more elaborate and scientific process, have been pronounced by our most intelligent refiners to be of a superior quality, are well granulated, and worth to-day ten cents per pound. The beet is pronounced by intelligent Germans, familiar with the process of sugar-making from it, to be fully equal to the best quality produced in Germany or France under the most favorable circumstances.

The production of sugar from beets has now come to be a leading interest in several European countries. The lands adapted to their culture command the highest prices, and the crop is so profitable that it warrants the most elaborate system of culture. The improvements in the quality of beet and in the process of manufacture, has been so great, that the yield within the last thirty years has increased from three to eleven per cent. Since this percentage has been obtained the beet in France has become the most important crop in the Empire. In 1861, 148,000 tons were raised in that country, against 9,000 tons in 1830. In Belgium the crop in 1861 was 18,000 tons. In Germany a very large amount was produced; the aggregate for Europe exceeding, in 1861, 200,000 tons, worth more than $40,000,000.

In our own country the culture of the beet is beginning to attract great interest and attention. The Agricultural Societies of Iowa and Illinois have already taken action in the matter, in which they have been vigorously seconded by the Illinois Central Railroad Company, which has offered to transport, free of charge to the manufacturers, all the beets grown upon the seed distributed by Mr. BELCHER. Enough has been accomplished to demonstrate that a superior sugar can be produced, and that the per centage of saccharine matter in the American beet exceeds that in the European, as might be expected from the greater heat and moisture of our climate. The President of the Illinois Central Railroad has already concluded an arrangement with a German firm to establish a refinery on his farm at Chatsworth, Ill., the buildings and machinery for which will be in readiness for work the coming season. The contractors will employ fifteen hundred acres of land in the culture of the root.

In the production of beet sugar we have all the advantage of the experience of European manufacturers. In the outset of the culture in France it was stimulated by the Government by the most prodigal bounties. It has now gained such firm footing that an enormous revenue is derived from it. It is so profitable that the annual rental of lands devoted to it in France exceeds four times the price now asked for the soil of the best prairie lands. In France the beet is cultivated entirely by manual labor. In this country, as soon as the plant gained root, the the whole culture would be done by labor-saving implements. The product of this country, the past year, averaged from fifteen to twenty-five tons to the acre, at a cost of not over one dollar the ton. The only element of cost of the manufactured article remaining unsolved, is that of refining. But, with the known skill of our refiners, and the extraordinary success which has attended their efforts, there can be no doubt that this will be equally striking when applied to the clarifying of beet as of cane sugar.

The value of the results growing out of the introduction of the sugar beet into this country can hardly be estimated. Sugar already stands next to manufactures of wool in our imports, and is very rapidly becoming the first. We pay nearly $40,000,000 annually for foreign sugars alone. If we can place ourselves, as the French have already done, in a position of independence of foreigners, we can keep at home the $40,000,000 in gold and silver, which a balance against us has compelled us to export, to make good our account in the great London clearing-house.

We hope the New Agricultural Commission will devote a portion of the appropriation made to it by Congress for the purpose of collecting and diffusing information upon this important subject. It is a crop peculiarly adapted to our Northern States, from the abundant moisture and heat of our climate—two indispensable conditions of successful culture.

LOYALTY OF THE WEST POINT GRADUATES.—If it be asked, how does the dismissal of Gen. FITZ-JOHN PORTER bear upon the question of the loyalty of the West Point graduates? the answer is, that the Court-martial was composed of nine Generals, and of these seven, all but two, were West Point graduates. These seven are Gens. HUNTER, SLOCUM, ROSS KING, BIRNEY, CASEY, BURNSIDE and MORRIS—with one exception, all veterans of the Regular Army. Brig.-Gen. ROBERTS, the Inspector-General of POPE's army, and the prosecutor, is a West Point graduate. Col. HOLT, the Judge-Advocate, is not a graduate.

The statement shows clearly that this decision of the Court is to be regarded as evidence of the high integrity of the West Point graduates. More than six hundred and twenty of them have remained loyal, while but one hundred and ninety-seven, and these chiefly Southerners, resigned their commissions at the commencement of the rebellion.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

Preparations for the New Issue of Treasury Notes.

Progress on the Finance Bill in the House.

Excitement Regarding the Porter Verdict.

ANOTHER BATCH OF GENERALS.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 22.

THE NEW TREASURY NOTES.

Arrangements are being made for the speedy emission of the one hundred million new Treasury Notes authorized by the late joint resolution of Congress. The agents of the Companies now engaged in printing green backs for the Government are here, as are also the representatives of two other Companies, each desirous of securing a share of the new work. It is believed that Secretary CHASE, profiting by experience, and in order to provide against damaging delays, will so divide up the printing of these new notes as to guarantee the payment of the army in the very shortest possible time that the resources of American art can compass.

THE FINANCES.

The FINANCE measures again formed the subject of discussion in the House to-day, and were argued with various ability by the various speakers. The general belief seems to be that the bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee, amended as suggested by Secretary CHASE, and as published exclusively in the TIMES of Tuesday, will pass by a large majority. Some unimportant amendments may be made. Secretary CHASE has addressed a letter to Mr. STEVENS, fully indorsing the financial features of the bill, as amended by the Committee of Ways and Means.

THE PORTER VERDICT.

Some excitement is caused by the verdict of the Porter Court-martial, but the action of the Government excites a hope that the courage thus displayed in dealing with an officer of high rank may make itself manifest in all its administrative acts.

OPERATIONS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH.

We have forborne to state what we have known in regard to the military programme for the Department of the South, because it was properly regarded as an official secret. As certain statements, however, have gone forth through various newspapers, there can be no harm in explaining that it is true that Government contemplates making a military and naval station at Brunswick, Ga., which, having a magnificent harbor, and being the terminus of the Florida and Brunswick Railroad, which connects it with Mobile and New-Orleans, is peculiarly fitted for a base of operations and a port for the liberation of the cotton now held in that region in large quantities, and the procuring of supplies.

It is not true, however, that orders have already been given for the establishment of a Custom-house at Brunswick; because, although it is in our possession, and a port of entry, yet certain military movements must precede this action. Of those movements we are not at liberty to speak further than to say that they are of great magnitude, and can scarcely fail, in a very short time, to give us permanent possession of all South Carolina and Georgia.

THE SICK AND WOUNDED.

Senator WILSON's bill to provide for the greater comfort of the sick and wounded soldiers, and published in the TIMES of this morning, was to-day discussed at length in the Senate, and will probably become a law.

MORE GENERALS.

The President to-day sent to the Senate between eighty and ninety Major and Brigadier-Generals, in addition to those communicated day before yesterday, which appeared exclusively in the TIMES. Among the Major-Generals are Gens. SHIELDS, SYKES, BUTTERFIELD and CARL SCHURZ. New-York State only gets two out of the large number of Brigadier-Generals—Cols. GRAHAM and DODGE.

THE CONDUCT OF THE WAR.

The Committee on the Conduct of the War are holding daily sessions, and disposing of a large amount of business recently referred to them. They are inquiring into the facts connected with the death of Capt. BOWEN, who committed suicide in the Old Capitol Prison.

ASSISTANT WAR SECRETARIES.

The two Assistant Secretaries of War, who were appointed at the instance of Mr. STANTON for one year, are now out of office, their time having expired this morning. Mr. TOMPKINS and Mr. WARNER retire, and Mr. WARNER remains as Assistant Secretary under an existing law.

ARMY OFFICERS.

The House Military Committee, at their meeting to-day, authorized the Chairman, Mr. OLIN, to report the Senate bill dismissing commissioned officers who are absent without leave, with an amendment allowing the President to change the sentence by reducing them to common soldiers in their regiments. They also agreed to report in favor of creating an ambulance corps for the army, of enlisted men, to be under the direction of the Surgeon-General, with regiment to be allowed twenty of this class to be detailed for that purpose.

AN ORDNANCE DEPOT.

Secretary STANTON has addressed a letter to the Military Committees of the Senate and House, in

...ture of the purchase of a site for an Ordnance Dept.

THE BROOWELL CASE.

...on the Dedwell Court of Inquiry to-day, neither Col. Lucas nor Gen. Mizner being present to testify, the Court stated that they could adjourn apparently at the time of a usual sitting in the consideration of matters they had before them, with closed doors, and that they would do so; and on Saturday, out of respect, session would adjourn until to-morrow. The room was accordingly cleared with this understanding. A dispatch was received by the Court, before going into secret session, from Gen. Burnside, stating that Col. Lucas could not conveniently be spared from his post at this time. Gen. Mizner is expected to be present to-morrow.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 22.

PAY OF THE SOLDIERS.

The money to pay the armies of Gens. ROSECRANS and GRANT has been furnished, and the greater part of the funds to pay the soldiers in North Carolina and the Department of the South, has also been issued. Gen. BURNSIDE's army will very soon be paid. A number of Paymasters obtained funds for this purpose to-day, and others will be supplied to-morrow.

THE IRON-CLADS.

The Navy Department has information from Fortress Monroe, by telegraph, announcing the safe arrival of the iron-clad Monitor-model steamer Wabash at that point from New-York. She rode out the terrific gale of the last two days as well as any vessel could do, being perfectly manageable and steady throughout.

A gentleman who left Dover, Del., at 6 o'clock this morning reports that the iron-clad steamer Nahant is at the Breakwater, having arrived there all right Monday evening.

The sloop-of-war Monongahela is also there, having arrived Tuesday night, also a propeller from New-York, loaded with troops.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The Secretary of the Interior sent to Congress to-day a letter accompanying a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asking for the passage of a law to divert from certain unexpended appropriations, amounting to $261,000, funds sufficient to pay the indebtedness incurred under other heads of appropriation now exhausted, and due to the various Indian Agencies of Oregon and Washington during the past three years. It is represented that great inconvenience and suffering have resulted from this long credit of the Government.

THE STORM IN WASHINGTON AND VICINITY.

The storm of yesterday and the day previous did much damage on the Potomac. A large number of steamers, barges, &c., employed by the Quartermaster's Department, are ashore, and hard and fast in the mud, between Alexandria and Aquia Creek, and Aquia Creek harbor. The damage, however, to nearly all of them is slight.

NOMINATIONS.

Judge W. E. OTTO, of Indiana, was to-day nominated by the President as Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

The President, to-day, made eighty-nine military nominations to the Senate, including Maj.-Gens. ROSECRANS, HOOKER and SUMNER, for promotion for meritorious service, by dating their commissions back to enhance the different battles where they severally distinguished themselves; twenty Brigadiers to be Major-Generals and sixty-three Colonels and other officers to be Brigadier-Generals, and three Hospital Chaplains. These nominations were received and severally referred to the Military Committee.

A CORRECTION.

The Evening Star, in speaking of the arrest of Mr. BURNS, and of his passing through Washington for New-York in military custody, mistakes in one particular, namely: that he is the principal agent or correspondent of the Associated Press with the Army of the Potomac. It is sufficient to assert that he has no business connection whatever with the Association. As to the remaining part of the article, stating on a rumor that THEODORE BARNARD, (erroneously designated as Mr. BURNS's principal assistant,) was also arrested and sent away from camp, no such information has reached the Washington Agency.

For Congressional Proceedings, see Eighth Page.

The New-Jersey Legislature.

TRENTON, Thursday, Jan. 22.

The Peace Resolutions came up to-day as the special order.

Mr. HEISMAN, of Bergen, moved that they be referred to a Special Committee.

Mr. CHAMBLIN, of Morris, moved an indefinite postponement.

After a debate of some length, in which Messrs. HEISMAN, RANDOLPH, CROWELL and BOCKEE participated, both motions were withdrawn, and the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

The Missouri Legislature.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Wednesday, Jan. 21.

In the Senate, to-day, the joint resolution was passed requesting President LINCOLN to withdraw his recent order emancipating Orders Nos. 2 and 24, when the civil authorities are obstructed in consequence of the prevailing disloyalty, and to facilitate their execution and to preserve the peace of the State, he be authorized to call the loyal portion of the enrolled militia into the United States service in place of the Federal troops withdrawn; the said enrolled militia to be paid on the same footing as the State militia, and receive the same pay as the United States troops. Order No. 8 provides for assessing the property of Secessionists to indemnify Union men for losses. Order No. 26 discriminates in favor of loyal men in matters of trade.

The California Senatorship—No Election.

SAN FRANCISCO, Wednesday, Jan. 21.

Ten ballots were had for Senator to-night. On the last ballot PHELPS had 36, SARGENT 26, and CONNESS 20, scattering 4.

Election of Ben. Wade as U. S. Senator.

CONNEAUT, Ohio, Thursday, Jan. 22.

Ben. WADE was reelected United States Senator on the first ballot, to-day, by 24 majority.

Wisconsin Sensitive.

MADISON, Wis., Thursday, Jan. 22.

J. R. DOOLITTLE was to-day reelected to the United States Senate.

The Fort of Arkansas Prisoners.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 22.

The following has been received at the Navy Department:

CAIRO, Ill., Jan. 21.

Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy:

The gunboat Lexington, Lieut.-Commander BURNS, has just arrived, at 11:30 A. M., conveying 4,792 rebel prisoners of war, from the Post of Arkansas.

(Signed.) A. M. PENNOCK,
Fleet Captain.

The Department has received an official account from Commodore FOOTE, relative to the brilliant part performed by his fleet in that action.

From San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, Jan. 22.

Sailed, ship Logan, for New-York, with a valuable cargo, including 1,100 casks of copper ore, 24,000 gallons of turpentine, 22,000 hides, 200 bales of wool, 300 casks of tallow, 575 bags of mustard seed, 170 casks of white oil, 4,100 bags of guano, 73,000 pounds of "Brazil," 300 cases of furs and 40 pipes of wine.

Oregon and British Columbia dates to the 15th have been received.

A Victoria paper says that 1,000 Indians have died at Vancouver's Island of small-pox this Winter. This disease will soon exterminate the race there.

Three thousand miners have gone from Oregon to Boise River, half way between Boise and Salt Lake, where it is believed prospects are more favorable than on Salmon River. A rush there is expected as soon as Spring opens.

Robbery of a Banking-House.

MARATHON, N. Y., Thursday, Jan. 22.

The banking-house of H. J. MERRIMAN, in this village, was entered last night by burglars. The safe door was opened by drilling, and robbed of its contents, $4,000.

OUR MINISTERS AT RIO JANEIRO.

His Quarrel with the British Resident—Characteristic Correspondence.

MR. CHRISTIE TO GEN. WEBB.

TREASURY MEANSION, Nov. 6, 1862.

SIR: Mr. BRODIE has informed me of a conversation which you had with him yesterday, and has shown me the letters which have passed between you. It appears that you are indignant with me because you say that I have violated an engagement made after my acceptance of your ample apology at Mr. Glinka's. I distinctly deny that anything of the kind appears in my letter to your colleague, who assumed the direction of your affairs until after the departure of the steamer, on the plea of your being too ill to attend to them, although he well knew that you were preparing to entertain company to dinner at the time you wrote, and that you had invited additional guests during the day. He no sooner received my answer, however, than it was submitted to you, ill as you were! and it does not 'appear' whether you had not previously seen his letter to me. Neither in my reply to his extraordinary letter constituting himself the guardian of your honor, and announcing the intention "to make a report to Earl Russell myself without referring Mr. Christie for the present," nor at any other time, or under any other circumstances, have I under or written which warranted your gratuitous and offensive assumptions that I made to you an ample apology at Mr. GLINKA's. But, instead of disputing about terms, let the simple facts of the case speak for themselves. At Mr. GLINKA's, the Russian Minister's, on Thursday evening, Oct. 30, in presence of the Russian and Prussian Ministers, the Russian Secretary of Legation, and at least one lady, you used toward me language far more fitting an English groom than an English Minister. I promptly "declared it incorrect—said it was my custom to punish impertinence—a bad custom perhaps, but a habit upon which I had always acted; and, by the God that made me, if you ever again were impertinent to me, I should punish you." To this you made no response, and after the lapse of some time I withdrew. You and Mr. GLINKA sent Mr. BRAMAN then had a consultation in relation to what had passed, when they came to me and said the matter must be immediately arranged or a meeting take place in the morning, and that you had agreed to challenge me unless it was arranged at once, and that you had placed the whole matter in their hands, &c. I replied, that in regard to the meaning I was ready to give it at sunrise, and in order to save unnecessary negotiations, I might as well inform them at once that under no conceivable circumstances would I make the slightest concession until you had declared that when you said what you did you intended no offence, regretting having used the language, and withdrew it, when I should be most happy to withdraw my language. And I particularly requested that they would not come to me with any other proposition, as I certainly should not listen to it. After an interval the gentlemen returned to me and said: "We are authorized by Mr. CHRISTIE, who has placed the affair in our hands, to say to you, that when he used the expression to which you took exception, he had no intention to offend—that he regrets having used it, and withdraws it." I, therefore, went directly to you, accompanied by the two gentlemen, and said: "I understand, Mr. CHRISTIE, from these gentlemen, that when you used the expression to which I took exception, you did not intend to give offence, and that you regret its use and withdraw it. By so doing you make me very happy, and I most cheerfully withdraw every word or unkind expression which I used, and I offer you my hand in reconciliation." It is unnecessary to allude to some trifling discussions between you and our friends, but upon Mr. Glinka's expressing his gratification that now all would be peace again in our small diplomatic circle, I said that I, too, rejoiced most sincerely at this agreeable termination of an unpleasant occurrence, and that with me the past was buried in oblivion never again to be thought of. You reiterated the sentiment, and we all returned to the house in good spirits at the happy termination of a very disagreeable affair. Now, Sir, is this or is it not a correct history of what occurred, omitting some particulars which did not concern me? If it be, where, let me ask, do you find warrant for the impudent and gratuitous assumption that I made you "an ample apology at Mr. Glinka's." If, in your judgment, this statement is not accurate, it becomes your duty to procure from Mr. GLINKA and Mr. BRAMAN their version of the case; and if their statement corresponds with mine, as it most assuredly will, I shall expect you to withdraw the offensive letter to which this is a reply, and which possibly should have been returned to you unanswered; and permit me here to surprise you, that in all future correspondence between us, your letters must relate solely to the matters under discussion, and that you must not introduce new subjects, extraneous to the question at issue. Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

GEN. WEBB TO EARL RUSSELL.

LEGATION OF UNITED STATES, PETROPOLIS, BRAZIL, November 7, 1862, 2 o'clock A. M.

MY LORD: Circumstances entirely beyond my control appear to render it imperative upon me, in defence of a most amiable young gentleman, an attaché of the British Legation at this Court, to bring to the notice of your Lordship a difficulty between H. E. M. Minister here and myself. Mr. CHRISTIE, not content with quarreling with the representatives of Russia, Austria, Prussia, and the Internuncio of the Pope, has deemed it expedient, or at best convenient, to fasten a quarrel upon me. This does not surprise those who know him best; and it should not surprise your Lordship when I relate a single incident known to every member of the diplomatic corps except the party most interested, the Austrian Minister, Mr. von BOURGUENEUF. Mr. WEBB has receptions every Tuesday evening. The coaches from Rio arrive at 5 P. M. On Tuesday evening, the 28th October, the Prussian Minister and his wife, and Mr. SCHWARTZENBERG came up from Rio, and just before our reception hour I went to their hotel, to bring them to my house. Not being quite ready to join us, I returned, and found assembled in our saloon Mr. CHRISTIE and his family, and all our guests, except Mr. GLINKA and his daughter, to whom I announced the fact of the arrival of Mr. and Mme. BRAMAN, who would shortly join us. Mr. CHRISTIE immediately inquired publicly of Mrs. WEBB: "Can you inform me whether Mr. SCHWARTZENBERG comes up as the Austrian Minister or as an attaché of the Prussian Legation?" Mrs. WEBB promptly and emphatically said: "Mr. CHRISTIE, we only know Mr. SCHWARTZENBERG as the Austrian Minister." I will not comment upon the manner in which the most gratuitous sneer at a colleague was received; but the kind feelings of all, and a solemn desire to preserve the peace of our small diplomatic circle, prevented his being repeated to Mr. SCHWARTZENBERG, who, up to this time, has not been advised of it. Of the merits of my controversy with Mr. CHRISTIE, it is no part of my purpose to speak. That is a matter between Mr. CHRISTIE and me, and between me and my Government. But Mr. FERNANDO H. NOGUEZ, one of your attachés, has drawn down upon him the enmity and persecution of Mr. CHRISTIE for simply refusing to make my house, generally would, up permit his Minister to control his social intercourse. The alternative has been distinctly presented to him, of taking part in Mr. CHRISTIE's quarrels, or of consenting to a suspension of our personal intercourse. This alternative was formally presented by Mr. CHRISTIE on the morning of Friday last, when Mr. NOGUEZ had been invited to dine at the British Legation to meet Mr. and Mme. BRAMAN and Mr. SCHWARTZENBERG, and Mr. NOGUEZ, preferring his independence as a gentleman to Mr. CHRISTIE's friendship, as the terms presented, has not since been in his house; and even when informed through Mr. BROWN to-day, (as will appear by his letter to Mr. CHRISTIE,) that if he called with my letter he would be received, he was refused access to him. When Mr. BROWN, in Mr. CHRISTIE's name, on Tuesday last, was urging Mr. NOGUEZ not to visit us, but to send as excuse that he was employed in copying dispatches for the mail, and Mr. NOGUEZ said that was not true, Mr. BROWN proposed to remedy that by giving him more work than he could possibly perform. Mr. NOGUEZ declined being a party to the arrangement, but Mr. BROWN produced an amount of work from Mr. CHRISTIE which it was physically impossible for Mr. NOGUEZ to do within the time prescribed, but which he promised to labor at until too much fatigued to continue the work! Mr. CHRISTIE possesses the legal right, or, at least, from position, the power to render his persecution of Mr. NOGUEZ, in his feeble state of health, exceedingly uncomfortable; and from his well-known antecedents, and his total disregard of truth and all gentlemanly qualities, as evinced in the correspondence inclosed, I cannot doubt what his course will be. Hence my troubling your lordship with this communication. I did hope, as my note to Mr. BROWN last evening demonstrates, that Mr. CHRISTIE might have seen and admitted the propriety of not troubling your Lordship by this packet at least with any communication on this subject. Indeed, he was bound, as a man of honor, by Mr. BROWN's request and my assent, that the matter should lie over. But having no faith in his acting as a gentleman would have done, at an early hour this morning, or rather yesterday, Thursday, it now being Friday, 3 A. M., I addressed a note to Mr. NOGUEZ, a copy of which you will find inclosed, urging him to procure Mr. CHRISTIE's withdrawal of the offensive letter addressed to me with Mr. BROWN. Upon Mr. BROWN's going to Mr. CHRISTIE with my note, and Mr. BROWN having been sent for to call at his house, he (Mr. CHRISTIE) refused to receive my note addressed to Mr. NOGUEZ, except from Mr. NOGUEZ himself or Mr. BROWN. Mr. NOGUEZ, therefore, promptly called on Mr. CHRISTIE, and was refused admittance. He then sent the note by his servant, who, after been told truly that Mr. CHRISTIE was in his room, and waiting half an hour for an answer, was told that Mr. CHRISTIE was not in, and that he need not wait. Mr. NOGUEZ then directed his servant to go to Mr. CHRISTIE, and remain there until he received an answer to his note, together with the inclosure. At 11 o'clock P. M., and not till then, he was handed the note from Mr. BROWN, but the inclosed note, of which Mr. CHRISTIE doubtless supposed there was no copy, he most ungentlemanly detained, and up to this hour he has not condescended to apprise Mr. NOGUEZ or me of his intentions, but most improperly retained possession of my note to Mr. NOGUEZ. Conduct like this requires no other comment than a simple statement of the fact. Mr. NOGUEZ's note to me will explain the circumstances under which he communicated the reckless manner in which Mr. CHRISTIE repudiated and disregarded the terms of our settlement, and the obligation mutually imposed by our agreement that the past should be buried in oblivion, and my note to Mr. NOGUEZ, detailing my interview with Mr. BROWN, and Mr. CHRISTIE's note to me, together with all the circumstances of the case, go to prove a reckless disregard of truth on the part of Mr. CHRISTIE, which is not characteristic of a gentleman, and certainly not commendable in a representative of the English nation. My letter to Mr. CHRISTIE explains sufficiently the nature of our difficulty, the terms upon which it was arranged, and the obligation thereby mutually imposed. Everything relating thereto is, however, personal to myself, and will doubtless, in due time, work itself out to a legitimate conclusion. I therefore close this long communication with the expression of my sincere regret that it has been necessary to trouble your Lordship on such a subject, and in a well-founded conviction that strict justice will be done to all, based upon my sincere admiration of your private character, and my profound respect for your talent and justice as a statesman, and cheerfully submit the case of Mr. NOGUEZ to the consideration which it is entitled to receive at your hands.

TROUBLE IN THE DEMOCRATIC CAMP.

Strange Estrangement of Wood and Barnard.

ASTOUNDING DEVELOPMENTS.

WHO SHALL BE KING?

The iconoclastic hand of Time has at length destroyed the symmetric temple of love and friendship, so long the resort of FERNANDO the first (and last) and Mr. Justice BARNARD.

Each to the other, as the accepted head of a powerful political faction, has been of great and incalculable service. Judge BARNARD, yet a young man, owes the triumphs of his numerous Judicial elevations to the apparently friendly but really selfish aid of Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.

No man ever received a benefit from the hand of Mr. WOOD for which sooner or later he did not pay roundly; no plan was ever suggested or matured by the long, long head of the polished Ex-Mayor which did not at some time or other inure to his personal advantage; no party was at any time triumphant, of which FERNANDO was a member, which was not embarrassed by his extortionate demand for patronage; and no ingenuous youngster was ever adopted, petted, chaperoned, pushed forward, placed, benefited in any way by this prince of managers, who did not at an early day stare with terror and surprise at the quid pro quo which, in a specified shape, was demanded in return.

Mr. BARNARD, Recorder BARNARD, Judge BARNARD, has at all times been the firm and faithful friend of FERNANDO, whether he appeared to him as a man and a brother, a Mayor and a leader, an appellant and a respondent, a Congressman elect or a United States Senator in prospective, (the mind's eye.) Patronage issued at WOOD's demand, opinions were molded to suit FERNANDO's judgment, friends were discarded to please the Ex-Mayor's whims, foes were conciliated that the Great Mogul might be propitiated—in other words, whatever Mr. WOOD wanted, Judge BARNARD granted. So there is little wonder that WOOD was always a pioneer for BARNARD's advancement, and a backer of his pretensions.

But time works wonders, and as men grow older they are apt to think more as they act less. It has doubtless occurred to Judge BARNARD, on several occasions, that his reputed connection with the slightly unpopular WOOD, was of but little benefit to his reputation as a jurist, his fame as an arbiter, his character as an upright Judge, and that a little more independence of action, of thought and speech, would be becoming in one who occupied so exalted a position. These thoughts have rankled in his mind, and made restless his ambitious yearnings, and at various times he has with considerable vehemence jumped the track, and asserted his manhood in WOOD's personal presence. Such an act would astound WOOD if anything could, but he has hitherto managed to retain his hold upon Mr. BARNARD's affection or, whatever, and carry his little point. But he has at last attempted too much, and we hear of an declared between the Judge and the Congressman elect.

Who will come out ahead, is the question of all questions which most excites the curiosity and stimulates the very life-blood of every rum-shop politician in the metropolis, every political club in the county, and every knot of office-holders or office-seekers in Gotham. "Which King?" is of as great importance to-day as it was in the olden time, only now the decision carries with it bread and butter, or a discharge, and no possible show for a loaf or a fish.

Tammany is in a blaze; Mozart in the dumps; the Tweed Ring swarms with estimated whisky value; Cozzens & Dunn's rooms with the busy chatterings of a hundred factionists; clerks in the Comptroller's office, in the Street Commissioner's office, in the score of offices where the nod of WOOD or the fiat edict of BARNARD makes or breaks men, daily tremble with extatic anxiety lest an unhappy sigh, or a lapsus linguæ on the wrong side of the question may upset their little dishes, and cause the children to go supperless to bed; and in fact wherever a Democrat can be found, there can be found consternation and surprise.

Already parties are formed and issues made. Judge BARNARD has a host of friends ready to do his will, and he will use them to the best of his ability in utterly annihilating an enemy, be he great or small. WOOD has, through the prestige hitherto enjoyed, a host of friends as well; but, unfortunately for them, the promises of their leader are not as tangible or as mercantile as the performances of the opposition, and hesitation, that precursor of destruction, has crept into their ranks.

If the war continues; if WOOD can afford to lose BARNARD, and BARNARD refuses to propitiate the offended Mogul, there will be such revelations of party iniquity, of personal emolument, of individual power, as has not entered into the hearts of ordinary mortals to conceive, and which, when made public, will warrant the entire population of the City in uttering a loud and long and sincere Te Deum.

Mr. WOOD's power, based to an extent absolutely inconceivable upon Judge BARNARD's friendship and support, will wane from this hour; patronage he has none; influence without patronage he never did have; and when a politician loses influence and pat-

...Mr. Cazenove, Secretary of the Legation, had met me with Mr. BROWN. NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

The Exchange of Prisoners—Violation of the Cartel by the Rebels.

FORTRESS MONROE, Wednesday, Jan. 21.

The United States Agent for the exchange of prisoners, Col. LUDLOW, has demanded from Mr. OTEY, the Confederate Agent, that all the United States officers now in the hands of the rebels should be in compliance with the cartel at once released.

Mr. OTEY has replied that all the officers now in the hands of the rebels, and captured before the 12th of January, the date of JEFF. DAVIS' Message, will not be released on parole, but will be exchanged for those of corresponding rank. All officers captured after the 12th inst. will be handed over to the Governors of the States in which they were captured, as indicated in JEFF. DAVIS' Message. (Col. LUDLOW says all this is in violation of the cartel.) Non-commissioned officers and privates will be released on parole, as heretofore.

The subject of citizen prisoners is not yet fully settled.

There are now at Richmond 2,000 Federal prisoners. Three transports will leave Fortress Monroe next Friday for City Point, to bring them down.

The steamboat New-York will leave to-night for Annapolis with 704 Union prisoners, who arrived here to-day from Richmond.

The storm has subsided, and the fleet of schooners have all gone to sea.

Court of Appeals.

ALBANY, Thursday, Jan. 22.

In the Court of Appeals number 104 is the last calendar to be called. The Court will adjourn to-morrow.

NEW-YORK SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES.

THE NEW-YORK SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES is published THIS MORNING, and may be had at the counter of the publication office in wrappers ready for mailing. In addition to the latest intelligence by telegraph up to the moment of going to press, there will be found in the current number full details of all military movements in the different departments from the pens of our special correspondents. Also, all official orders, reports and documents, and the latest and fullest Washington news, European news, with graphic letters from our correspondents in London and Paris, giving the tone of public feeling abroad, is made a special and permanent feature. In addition to Editorials on all the current topics of the day, the SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES has a page of carefully prepared commercial matter, giving the latest financial news and market reports; items of agricultural and domestic interest, compiled from sources many of which are otherwise inaccessible to the American reader; and marriages and deaths of the week.

The "SEMI-WEEKLY RECORD," or news summary—being a careful synopsis and digest of the news of the day, both rebellious and general—is alone worth double the subscription price to the paper, as it preserves in a condensed and conveniently classified form all news of interest, and must prove valuable as a record to all time.

After a Lawyer with a "Sharp Stick"—Concerning a "Returned Californian" and the Alleged Use of His Tongue.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Justice Barbour.

James S. Carpentier vs. Peter Chrystal.—The plaintiff is a lawyer, and was formerly a partner with the late David Graham. In his complaint he describes the defendant thus: "At the time (1845) of the dissolution of the copartnership (between Graham and Carpentier) Peter Chrystal was a client of said Graham, and had retained and employed the said David Graham, to defend him (Chrystal) upon two charges of felony then pending against him, upon which indictments were about that time duly found in the Court of General Sessions, and were, upon the motion of David Graham, removed into the Court of Oyer and Terminer for trial."

The complaint then states that the plaintiff was appointed one of the executors of the will of David Graham, and, as such, at the instance of certain of the family of Graham, commenced a suit against Chrystal, in the month of December, 1866, for the recovery of from $200 to $300, a balance of counsel fees alleged to be due from Chrystal to Graham—Chrystal, about that time having returned from California, proved to be in possession of large wealth. In that suit he was joined by his coexecutor.

The complaint alleges that on the 19th of May, 1862, while the plaintiff was passing through "the most crowded streets of this city, he was hailed by the defendant, who was then with a sharp stick," and that passing on a short distance the defendant returned and said to the plaintiff, in a loud and boisterous tone, and in a manner attracting great attention, "You are a G—d d—d scoundrel," &c., "You swore to a G—d d—d lie," and added much else of the same complimentary character.

For this language, and to recover damages for the use thereof, this action was brought.

The defendants allege that the balance of fees alleged to be due to Graham had been long since paid, and that to prevent the defendant from being a witness in his own behalf on the trial of the action, the plaintiff had brought the action in the name of the executors of Graham, instead of in his own name as surviving partner. Also that the defendant civilly accosted the plaintiff at the time of the alleged slander or libel, and that he was insultingly repulsed, the plaintiff calling him a "damned convicted felon," &c. That which excited from the use of this language by the plaintiff, defendant talked somewhat harshly to the plaintiff, &c., &c. Case still on.

E. Lansing, for plaintiff; John McKeon and James M. Whiting, for defendant.

Execution Against the Person—May It be Issued After Judgment—Liability of the Sheriff for an Escape.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Justice Barbour.

Peter Shafer and another vs. James Lynch.—This was an action against the defendant as Sheriff of the City and County of New-York, to recover for the escape of one Theodore T. Edgerton from the jail liberties of this county, in June last. Edgerton had been arrested, as alleged, on an execution on a judgment recovered in an action for claim and delivery of personal property in favor of the plaintiffs, and gave bail for the limits. It appeared that, at the time this suit was commenced against the Sheriff, Edgerton was at Fortress Monroe engaged in selling ice.

The defendant's counsel contended that no execution could lawfully be issued against the person of Edgerton, no order of arrest having been issued previous to the judgment in the original suit. In support of this position, the case of Purchase vs. Bullows (14 Abb., 287) was cited. Defendant also further objected that the plaintiffs had, in September, 1861, assigned the judgment against Edgerton to F. W. Lesak, who was, therefore, the actual party in interest, and should have been plaintiff in this action.

The question as to the right to arrest on the execution was argued at some length, on a motion to dismiss the complaint, but the Court declined to dismiss the complaint on that ground at that stage of the case.

Defendant then gave evidence tending to show that Shafer and Lenkow, the plaintiffs in the judgment, gave to Edgerton a consent that he might have the liberties, and that he left in consequence of such consent. Mr. Lesak was called and produced an affidavit of the plaintiffs of this judgment, with other property, in September, 1861. Plaintiffs' counsel thereupon conceded that the assignment, of the existence of which they stated they were ignorant, until it was produced by the witness, was a bar to the action in the name of the present plaintiffs. The Court then instructed the jury to rendered verdict in favor of the defendant.

Solomon L. Hull and H. P. Allen for plaintiffs; A. J. Vanderpool for Sheriff.

Discharged—The Writ of Habeas Corpus in Military Cases.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Justice Sutherland.

Matter of Miller.—The relator was charged with inducing recruits to enlist, and after obtaining bounties, to escape. He was confined in Castle William.

This was a writ of habeas corpus for his relief, and in return to it Mr. Glassey, a Deputy Provost Marshal, read a telegram from the Secretary of War, rehearsing the writ upon the ground of the suspension of of the writ of habeas corpus in military cases.

An attachment was, however, issued, and upon its return Mr. Glassey stated that the Government consented to the discharge of Miller. Ordered accordingly.

A POWERFUL AND GENUINE SUCCESS
FOR THE NEW PLAY, and MISS BATEMAN'S
great impersonation of her admirable
LEAH, THE FORSAKEN,
which has been so enthusiastically by the voice of the Press and public pronounced to
HER GREATEST SUCCESS.
It will be repeated EVERY EVENING until further notice, by MR. J. W. WALLACK, Jr., and
MR. EDWIN ADAMS
In their Original Characters.
A few extracts from the opinions of the Daily Press are subjoined:
It is in the pathetic portions of the play that Miss BATEMAN is seen in the best advantage. The third and fifth acts are really admirable specimens of intense and concentrating emotion. Earlier the situations are feverish, and call for little from the artist except plastic grace. Miss BATEMAN's appearance is eminently in her favor, and excites the sympathy which the character demands. Her performance being thus nicely balanced between graceliness of pose and power of interpretation, was of course a success. The lady was called out after every act.—Times.
It must be an infinite satisfaction for an artist of Miss Bateman's youth and brief career, to find such proofs of the attraction of her name as were displayed last evening at this theatre. The audience which greeted the opening of this, her second New-York engagement during the season, was overflowingly large and cordially sympathetic. Many compositions are selected for the exhibition of those vehement effects of declamation by which Miss Bateman always appeals most strongly to her audiences, and these are employed in a manner which invariably secures the most tumultuous applause. Miss Bateman was called before the curtain at the close of the play, as also were Mr. J. W. Wallack, Jr., and Mr. Edwin Adams, who assisted her with painstaking fidelity throughout.—Tribune.
This play is full of powerful scenes. The rage of the mob in the first act, the curse of Leah in the fourth act, and her pathetic forgiveness of her injuries in the fifth, are as powerful scenes as any in the drama out of Shakspeare. Miss Bateman is more at home in the last stage, in many respects, than in this piece. All her passion and all her power over the sensibilities of her audience were never better displayed than in "Leah." The curse is as thrilling in its way as that of King Lear on his daughters, while the pathos of all is touching in its pathetic interest. All of Miss Bateman's critics have admitted her singular influence over the passions, but have denied her ability to move the sympathies. But her best character—Julia, in "The Hunchback"—is noted for its sympathetic power, and Leah is another proof of the fact. The parts in this purely pathetic drama, Tortigny excepted, are awarded the exquisite mountings and appointments of this piece. The scenes were generally pastoral in their character—cottages, fields of grain, bits of woodland and water—but all were gem. Every detail, the mind-reading, the spinning, the pastoral, the dramatic author expressly for Mrs. JOHN WOOD, who will sustain the principal character.

MOVEMENTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Newbern, Tuesday, Jan. 13.

The following is just received from Winston, N. C., dated yesterday:

[illegible] Monitor and Passaic are now in Beaufort Harbor, N. C., waiting for ammunition. Two more formidable iron-clad steamers are expected to join them. The two coming are turret vessels, and are understood to be called the Nahant and Patapsco. There [illegible] to their destination.

[illegible] NEW DEPARTURE ATTACK ON WILMINGTON.

Gen. Wright, the rebel Commander at Wilmington, believing that the expedition sailing out in North Carolina waters is intended for that place, has issued the following address to the citizens:

HEADQUARTERS WILMINGTON, Jan. 14, 1863.

To the Citizens of Wilmington:

[illegible] I have once and again advised the people about Wilmington, their property in case of an attack on the city. Rumors have reached us that we are driven off by the [illegible] of the enemy, either in the vicinity of the city, or by the strength of the defences, but I regret that such rumors have reached you, and to my great regret there are [illegible] many women and children in the city.

[illegible] to advise you of my belief that, within [illegible] days, perhaps three—the enemy will attempt to force a passage to attack this place, by land and water. [illegible] I feel confident that if they do, I must [illegible] attack with the loss to cause much disaster, [illegible] peril, the women, children, and helpless consumers. Should God so order it that we [illegible] disaster, or unexpected disaster, [illegible] in every respect it [illegible] when they have opportunity [illegible] to leave, when the enemy are [illegible] I shall take precautionary measures and give due notice of danger.

Very respectfully and truly yours, W. H. C. WHITING, Major-General Commanding.
